

DEL ROSARIO CLAIMS CIA HAD ROLE IN OPIUM TRADE

Excerpt of article entitled "Golden Triangle of White Death" by Barbara Stasko; Warsaw, Trybuna Ludu, Polish, 10 December 1972, p 57

An interesting statement by a former employee of the CIA, Del Rosario, who was employed by Continental Air Service in Laos up to 1971, is found in a book recently published in Paris by Lambert and Catherine Lamour and entitled "Great Opium Maneuvers": "My [air] service's transport planes carried many tons of rice. But when I saw the notation 'miscellaneous' in the flight logs under the heading of cargo, I knew it was opium."

"Usually," Del Rosario continues, "charter planes flew from Ban Houai Sai (a Lao village with large opium-producing establishments) to Vientiane. The opium was unloaded in Vientiane and stored in Air America warehouses. Other times the opium was transferred to other planes flying to Savannakhet and Pakse in Laos, the American base Udon in Thailand, Da Nang in South Vietnam, and to Bangkok."

In response to the question of why the CIA so actively participated in opium trade in this region of Asia, Del Rosario said: "In my view this trade augmented CIA revenues for which the CIA did not have to account in Washington. The purchase of opium from mountain tribes was also a convenient means ^{for promoting} ~~of enabling~~ their alliance with these tribes."

APPROVED FOR RELEASE □
DATE: 29-Oct-2009

DEL ROSARIO CLAIMS CIA ROL IN OPIUM TRADE

Excerpt of article entitled "Golden Triangle of White Death" by Barbara Stasko; Warsaw, Trybuna Ludu, Polish, 10 December 1972, p 27

An interesting statement by a former employee of the CIA, Del Rosario, who was employed by Continental Air Service in Laos up to 1971, is found in a book recently published in Paris by Lambert and Catherine Lacombe and entitled "Great Opium Maneuvers": "My [air] service's transport planes carried many tons of rice. But when I saw the notation 'miscellaneous' in the flight logs under the heading of cargo, I knew it was opium."

"Usually," Del Rosario continues, "charter planes flew from Ban Houai Sai (a Lao village with large opium producing establishments) to Vientiane. The opium was unloaded in Vientiane and stored in Air America warehouses. Other times the opium was transferred to other planes flying to Savannakhet and Pakse in Laos, the American base Udorn in Thailand, Da Nang in South Vietnam, and to Bangkok."

In response to the question of why the CIA so actively participated in opium trade in this region of Asia, Del Rosario said: "In my view this trade augmented CIA revenues for which the CIA did not have to account in Washington. The purchase of opium from mountain tribes was also a convenient means of enabling their alliance with these tribes."