WELCOME ABOARD COMMITTEE

NAVY/NOTRE DAME GAME

1 NOVEMBER 1980

At the annual meeting of the Board of Trustees Naval Academy Foundation, Loree 'Rip' Collins, USNA '49 and Aubrey C. Lewis, ND '58, Trustees, were asked to explore and make recommendations regarding a post-game cocktail party after the Navy/Notre Dame game to be played at The Meadowlands, 1 November 1980.

Subsequently, RADM William P. Lawrence, U. S. Navy, Superintendent of the Naval Academy, requested assistance regarding the post-game activities of the 700 midshipmen.

A meeting with Loris F. Smith, General Manager, Arena/Stadium, revealed that much more was involved and a golden opportunity presented itself to sell the Sports Complex to the Navy so that they would return for future Navy/Notre Dame games, the Army/Navy game and the Garden State Bowl if invited.

Accordingly, a Welcome Aboard Committee was formed, a schedule of events and activities was established and all hands got underway.

Gov. Byrne, Rev. Laurence T. Murphy and Loree 'Rip' Collins discuss activities in connection with the Navy-Notre Dame game

Jerseyans make waves for Navy-ND grid clash

A Welcome Aboard Committee made up of New Jersey's business and professional leaders and graduates of the U.S. Naval Academy and Notre Dame, is sponsoring a series of events in conjunction with the Navy Notre Dame game, to be played at Giants Stadium, Nov. 1.

Loree "Rip" Collins, co-chairman of the committee, said the weekend will get under way with a gala presented by the Waterloo Foundation for the Performing Arts at the Stadium Lounge and Press Club, Giants Stadium, at 8 p.m., Oct. 31. Performers will include the Naval Academy Glee Club and Drum & Bugle Corps and the Voorhees Choir of Douglass College. Vice Admiral William P. Lawrence, superintendent of the U.S. Naval Academy, will be the guest of honor.

On Nov. 1, the Naval Academy Glee Club will sing at the Great Falls of Paterson and the Drum & Bugle Corps will perform a morning tattoo. Paterson Mayor Lawrence Kramer said the first operational submarine, which was built and launched in Paterson, will be paraded through the city from West Side Park to Historical Park in Paterson.

The Naval Academy Catholic Choir will perform at a 5:30 p.m. Mass in St. Patrick's Cathedral, Oct. 31. The morning of the game, Rev. Laurence T. Murphy, outgoing president of Seton Hall University, will celebrate morning Mass at the Sacred Heart Cathedral in Newark. Murphy, a member of the committee, is a Naval Academy graduate.

The Newark Museum, 49 Washington St., Newark, will have an exhibit of naval history, Oct. 25 through Nov. 8. The Battleship New Jersey Committee will have its 10-foot model on display at the stadium, and State Sen. William J. Hamilton (D-Middlesex) will introduce a resolution in the legislature welcoming the Navy to New Jersey.

Milford A. Vieser, past president of the New Jersey Historical Society, heads the historical activities of the committee.

The weekend will close with a spot-game reception for the Naval Academy's official party at the Stadium Club, hosted by the committee and friends of Navy and Notre Dame.

Collins added the battalion of Midshipmen that will march at the game will be entertained at a dinner-dance by Douglass College in New Brunswick as part of the post-game activities.

Aubrey C. Lewis is co-chairman of the Welcome Aboard Committee, and Gov. Brendan Byrne is honorary chairman. Officers of the Navy League, Naval Academy Athletic Association and Notre Dame and West Point Alumni Associations also are participating.

Byrne said the Navy-Notre Dame game "affords us the opportunity to present to the nation the advantages of the Sports Complex and the excellence of New Jersey."

Collins said the committee hopes the Navy-Notre Dame game will continue to be played in the Meadowlands, and that the Army-Navy game "will make New Jersey its home."

Dear Admiral Turner:

Thank you very much for your note of December 18. I enjoyed the session very much and was sorry I had to leave early.

As an Overseer of Harvard University, I have followed with great interest the correspondence between you and Harvard's President Derek Bok. I was glad to hear that you had very satisfactory conversations with him just before our meeting. I also heard that you had an outstanding reception at the Kennedy School the night before. I appreciate very much the time you took to visit Boston. It certainly was a success and much appreciated by everyone.

Yours truly,

MEMORANDUM FOR THE RECORD

SUBJECT: Telephone Call from Bow Cutter, OMB

1. I had a phone call from Bow Cutter in response to my letter to Jim McIntyre concerning our interpretation of the Presidential budget meeting. He wanted to let me know that they agree with our interpretation.

2. He asked that we get our staffs together on pricing issues between now and the time we get into the fall debates. He hoped we could thus narrow the fall debate program to policy issues, with pricing issues having been settled in advance. I assured him we would be happy to do that.

"The Hall of Heroes Books are not only inspiring reading, but they revitalize one's pride and belief in our country and its people. Every one of these books should be must reading for all Americans from the age of ten to eighty."

Robert S. Allen
Syndicated Columnist "Inside Washington"
Publishers-Hall Syndicate

"In these troubled times, when so many of our basic American values are in question, it is almost a necessity to be reminded of the men who, 'above and beyond the call of duty,' made us a great nation. These books are a superb reenactment of the acts of extraordinary valor of those who gave so much that we might continue to be what we are. I heartily recommend them."

"In an America which seems to be forgetting its greatness, the Hall of Heroes Books are a timely reminder that men of courage and dedication have always been with us. Those who fought and died—or fought and lived—for this country are stirringly memorialized in these books which should be read by all Americans—lest we forget."

Ralph de Toledano
King Features Syndicated Columnist "In Washington"

These books—under the general heading of Hall of Heroes, by A.S. Curtis—are the best of this type I have ever seen. They are inspirational, patriotic and, most of all, intrinsically quite interesting. I hope they can achieve a wide audience. They include illustrated stories about some of the proudest heroic deeds in our nation's long history.

STANSFIELD TURNER, comandante de las fuerzas de la OTAN en el sur de Europa fue designado por Carter como director de la CIA. (AP)

El Almirante Stansfield Turner, Designado por el Presidente Carter Director de la CIA

WASHINGTON (AFP).- Al designar al almirante Stansfield Turner a la cabeza de la CIA (Central Norteamericana de Inteligencia), el presidente Jimmy Carter reiteró ayer que sigue aferrado a la idea de formar un equipo con personas que, como dice el portavoz Jody Powell, "cuentan con su total confianza."

Camarada de promoción de Turner en la escuela naval de Annapolis, en rango sensiblemente inferior, el actual jefe del ejecutivo de Estados Unidos nunca ocultó la admiración que siente por quien calificó como "el mejor militar que jamás haya conocido".

Tras el peso en falso de la elección de Theodore Sorensen, quien renunció presionado por una oposición donde se mezclaron legisladores, conservadores y la comunidad de los servicios de informaciones, Carter designó a Turner después de consultar a los líderes del Senado, para evitar que la

Comisión de la Cámara Alta Sobre Servicios de Informaciones rechazara su propuesta.

En la lista de doce directores que desfilaron al frente de la CIA desde su creación hace 32 años, Turner será el cuarto almirante y el sexto militar de carrera, se indicó en los círculos políticos locales.

La lista es la siguiente:

- 1.- Almirante William Souers (enero a junio de 1946).
- 2.- Teniente general Sanford Vandenberg (junio 1946 a mayo 1947).
- 3.- Almirante Henry Hillenkotter (mayo 1947 a octubre 1950).
- 4.- General Walter Bedell Smith (octubre 1950 a febrero 1953).
- 5.- Alan Dulles (febrero 1953 a noviembre 1961).
- 6.- John McCone (noviembre 1961 a abril 1965).
- 7.- Almirante William Rayburn (abril 1965 a junio 1966).
- 8.- Richard Helms (junio 1966 a febrero 1973).
- 9.- James Schlesinger (febrero a julio 1973).
- 10.-

William Colby (septiembre 1973 a enero 1976). 11.- George Bush (enero 1976 a enero 1977).

Al parecer en las últimas semanas, según Enno Koche, ex adjunto de Bush que le sucedió como director interino, se habló mucho de la candidatura del general retirado James Gavin, un profesional de los servicios de informaciones.

Pero el intento de ubicar a Gavin al frente de la CIA fracasó porque, al tener 70 años, el ex embajador en París quedó casi automáticamente descartado de la lista de probables tildada en la Casa Blanca.

Si Gavin había sido considerado "Paloma" desde el comienzo de la guerra de Vietnam, el almirante Turner estaba incluido en las filas de los relativamente moderados — en todo caso nada belicistas — en la alta jerarquía del Pentágono.

Turner realizó una brillante carrera que lo llevó en agosto de 1974 hasta el comando de las fuerzas meridionales de la OTAN (Organización del Tratado del Atlántico Norte) y de la segunda flota norteamericana basada en Nápoles.

Pero también se preocupó por cultivarse en otros terrenos, y apenas salió de Annapolis ganó una beca de Rhodes, distinción académica de las más codiciadas para estudiar en la Universidad de Oxford.

En su autobiografía Carter dijo que al dejar la Marina había renunciado, con gran pesar, a su primera gran ambición, que consistía en ser comandante en jefe de operaciones navales.

Choice of Turner Should Be Ideal

By WILLIAM A. CROUSE, Managing Editor of The Call

When President Carter sent to the Senate the name of Ted Sorensen to be confirmed as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, all hell broke loose.

Sorensen, as a close aide to the late President Kennedy, is known for his sharp mind and an ability to cut through the core of things. He also has a reputation for being contentious and calculatingly cutting.

And, horror of horrors, Sorensen rushed to the side of Ted Kennedy right after Chappaquiddick and who wants to dredge that up again!

Thus when the administration counted votes Sorensen didn't have them. Yet he pulled the rug from beneath the committee that was about to query him by announcing dramatically that he was asking the President to withdraw his name.

The President did, and some of his critics say that the lack of Senate support for Sorensen was a slap at Jimmy Carter.

No way. It provided the means for some members of the national legislature to get back at someone who at one time or another had trod on sensitive toes.

So Jimmy Carter had to do some more looking for a new CIA chief. Several possibilities were mentioned, among them Cambridge's Gen. James Gavin, the hero of the Battle of the Bulge, but the general's age militated against him.

The President finally decided on a nominee from within the military establishment who should have no difficulty in being confirmed by the Senate — and who should be able to turn in a top drawer job.

The President's nominee is Adm. Stansfield Turner, commander Allied Forces Southern Europe and an Annapolis classmate of the President. They did not know each other at the Naval Academy, however, the President revealed in announcing his choice.

"He was so far ahead of us that we never considered him competition or even a peer, and I'm not exaggerating," the President chuckled the other day.

Stansfield (Call Me Stan) Turner is a sharp guy all right. He finished 25th in that graduating class at Annapolis while Jimmy Carter ranked 59th, which explains the President's statement.

Stan Turner is well and favorably known in Rhode Island where he served a two-year hitch (everybody in the Navy serves a hitch) as president of the prestigious but stodgy Naval War College in Newport.

While at Newport from 1972 to 1974 Stan Turner was a vice admiral (three stars) and as president of the War College churned up more waves on Coasters Harbor Island than had been seen since the storied Alfred Thayer Mahan was its chief.

What Admiral Turner attempted to do was to inject a bit more philosophy and thought provocation into the training of the officers at the college. It was not enough, he thought, merely to play war games in a dark room or on a painted floor. If Navy men were to meet the perils of today, he reasoned, they must learn to do today's thinking.

"Here we study the cause of war and how to conduct the naval aspects of war if one should come," Turner told a small group of newspeople whom he hosted at an informal press conference back in July of 1972.

An Editor's View

"Here we are looking for the flexibility of mind and how men can achieve analytical thinking. We must pause and take a look at where we stand. Do we need to give fewer subjects and teach them in greater depth? We must make sure that we have the tools and techniques to tackle a variety of problems. But we are going to stress individual research and insist on an air of academic freedom."

Admiral Turner met with considerable success in his program at Newport. He made the War College something his earlier predecessor, Admiral Mahan, thought it should be, a thorough training ground for promising officers in the Navy with the rank of commander or above.

What impressed Rhode Island newspeople was the zest and enthusiasm with which Turner tackled his Newport assignment. He looked upon the job as a challenge that he would have no difficulty dealing with.

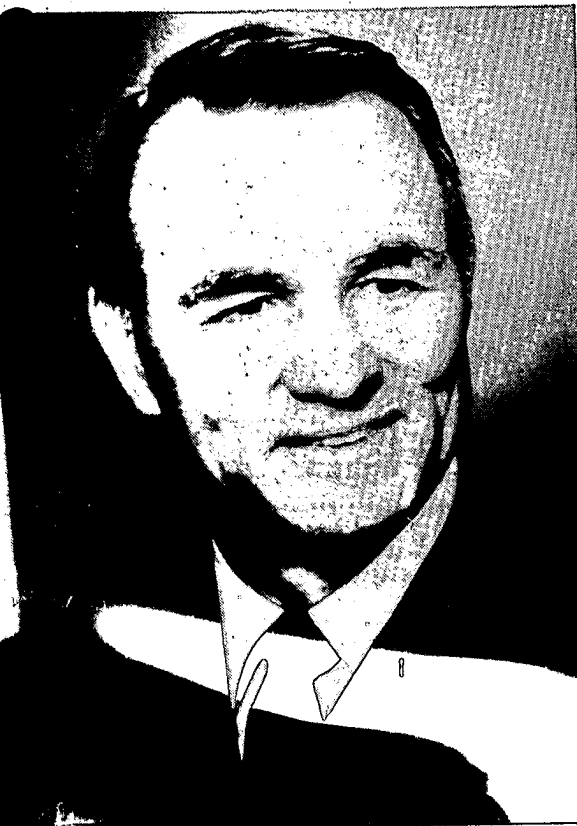

His hitch at Newport was cut short when his talents were determined to be more essential elsewhere. He was assigned to Naples to head up Allied Forces Southern Europe.

Now his former classmate has chosen him to head up the CIA, a troubled agency if ever there was one, yet an agency that is vital to the security of the nation.

There is no doubt in this quarter that Admiral Turner will bring to Langley the same zest and enthusiasm he brought to Newport. This, coupled with his keen analytical mind, should breathe new life into a vital federal agency that in recent years has suffered from a severe case of bureaucratic fever.

William Colby (septiembre 1973 a enero 1976). 11.- George Bush (enero 1976 a enero 1977).

Al parecer en las últimas semanas, según Enno Koche, ex adjunto de Bush que le sucedió como director interino, se habló mucho de la candidatura del general retirado James Gavin, un profesional de los servicios de informaciones.

Pero el intento de ubicar a Gavin al frente de la CIA fracasó porque, al tener 70 años, el ex embajador en París quedó casi automáticamente descartado de la lista de probables tildada en la Casa Blanca.

Si Gavin había sido considerado "Paloma" desde el comienzo de la guerra de Vietnam, el almirante Turner estaba incluido en las filas de los relativamente moderados — en todo caso nada belicista — en la alta jerarquía del Pentágono.

Turner realizó una brillante carrera que lo llevó en agosto de 1974 hasta el comando de las fuerzas meridionales de la OTAN (Organización del Tratado del Atlántico Norte), y de la segunda flota norteamericana basada en Nápoles.

Pero también se preocupó por cultivarse en otros terrenos, y apenas salió de Annapolis ganó una beca de Rhodes, distinción académica de las más codiciadas para estudiar en la Universidad de Oxford.

En su autobiografía Carter dijo que al dejar la Marina, había renunciado, con gran pesar, a su primera gran ambición, que consistía en ser comandante en jefe de operaciones navales.

Choice of Turner Should Be Ideal

By WILLIAM A. CROUSE, Managing Editor of The Call

When President Carter sent to the Senate the name of Ted Sorensen to be confirmed as director of the Central Intelligence Agency, all hell broke loose.

Sorensen, as a close aide to the late President Kennedy, is known for his sharp mind and an ability to cut through the core of things. He also has a reputation for being contentious and calculatingly cutting.

And, horror of horrors, Sorensen rushed to the side of Ted Kennedy right after Chappaquiddick and who wants to dredge that up again!

Thus when the administration counted votes Sorensen didn't have them. Yet he pulled the rug from beneath the committee that was about to query him by announcing dramatically that he was asking the President to withdraw his name.

The President did, and some of his critics say that the lack of Senate support for Sorensen was a slap at Jimmy Carter.

No way. It provided the means for some members of the national legislature to get back at someone who at one time or another had trod on sensitive toes.

So Jimmy Carter had to do some more looking for a new CIA chief. Several possibilities were mentioned, among them Cambridge's Gen. James Gavin, the hero of the Battle of the Bulge, but the general's age militated against him.

The President finally decided on a nominee from within the military establishment who should have no difficulty in being confirmed by the Senate — and who should be able to turn in a top drawer job.

The President's nominee is Adm. Stansfield Turner, commander Allied Forces Southern Europe and an Annapolis classmate of the President. They did not know each other at the Naval Academy, however, the President revealed in announcing his choice.

"He was so far ahead of us that we never considered him competition or even a peer, and I'm not exaggerating," the President chuckled the other day.

Stansfield (Call Me Stan) Turner is a sharp guy all right. He finished 25th in that graduating class at Annapolis while Jimmy Carter ranked 59th, which explains the President's statement.

Stan Turner is well and favorably known in Rhode Island where he served a two-year hitch (everybody in the Navy serves a hitch) as president of the prestigious but stodgy Naval War College in Newport.

While at Newport from 1972 to 1974 Stan Turner was a vice admiral (three stars) and as president of the War College churned up more waves on Coasters Harbor Island than had been seen since the storied Alfred Thayer Mahan was its chief.

What Admiral Turner attempted to do was to inject a bit more philosophy and thought provocation into the training of the officers at the college. It was not enough, he thought, merely to play war games in a dark room or on a painted floor. If Navy men were to meet the perils of today, he reasoned, they must learn to do today's thinking.

"Here we study the cause of war and how to conduct the naval aspects of war if one should come," Turner told a small group of newsmen whom he hosted at an informal press conference back in July of 1972.

An Editor's View

"Here we are looking for the flexibility of mind and how men can achieve analytical thinking. We must pause and take a look at where we stand. Do we need to give fewer subjects and teach them in greater depth? We must make sure that we have the tools and techniques to tackle a variety of problems. But we are going to stress individual research and insist on an air of academic freedom."

Admiral Turner met with considerable success in his program at Newport. He made the War College something his earlier predecessor, Admiral Mahan, thought it should be, a thorough training ground for promising officers in the Navy with the rank of commander or above.

What impressed Rhode Island newsmen was the zest and enthusiasm with which Turner tackled his Newport assignment. He looked upon the job as a challenge that he would have no difficulty dealing with.

His hitch at Newport was cut short when his talents were determined to be more essential elsewhere. He was assigned to Naples to head up Allied Forces Southern Europe.

Now his former classmate has chosen him to head up the CIA, a troubled agency if ever there was one, yet an agency that is vital to the security of the nation.

There is no doubt in this quarter that Admiral Turner will bring to Langley the same zest and enthusiasm he brought to Newport. This, coupled with his keen analytical mind, should breathe new life into a vital federal agency that in recent years has suffered from a severe case of bureaucratic fever.
