THE BASIS FOR A PERMANENT, UNITED STATES FOREIGN INTELLIGENCE SERVICE

The formulation of national policy, both in its political and military aspects, is influenced and determined by knowledge of the aims, policies and activities of other nations.

All major powers have had, for a long time past, permanent, world-wide secret intelligence services, reporting directly to the highest echelons of their governments.

Prior to the present war, the United States had no adequate secret intelligence service and no over-all intelligence organization.

The dangers of this situation have been generally recognized and must be remedied. For the future, provision must be made for an uninterrupted flow of intelligence, in peace as in war, so that American policy may be based on foreign situations and developments as seen and interpreted by Americans.

What is needed is an organization which will procure intelligence both by overt and covert methods and will at the same time provide intelligence guidance, determine national intelligence objectives and correlate the intelligence material collected by all government agencies.

Experience teaches that the establishment of such an organization should be based on the following principles:

- 1) That there should be a central, over-all Foreign Intelligence Service which (except for specialized intelligence pertinent to the operations of the armed services and certain other government agencies) could serve objectively and impartially the needs of the diplomatic, military, economic and propaganda services of the government.
- 2) That such a Service should not operate clandestine intelligence within the United States.
- 3) That it should have no police function and should not be identified with any law-enforcing agency, either at home or abroad.

- 4) That the operations of such a Service should be primarily the collection, analysis and dissemination of intelligence on the policy or strategy level.
- 5) That such a service should be under a highly qualified Director, appointed by the President, and be administered under Presidential direction.
- 6) That, subject to the approval of the President, the policy of such a Service should be determined by the Director, with the advice and assistance of a board on which the Department of State and the Armed Services should be represented.
- 7) That such a Service, charged with collecting intelligence affecting national interests and defense, should have its own means of communication and should be responsible for all secret activities, such as:
  - a) Secret Intelligence
  - b) Counter-espionage
  - c) Crypto-analysis
  - d) Clandestine subversive operations
- 8) That such a Service be operated on both vouchered and unvouchered funds.
- 9) That such a Service have a staff of specialists, professionally trained in analysis of intelligence and possessing a high degree of linguistic, regional or functional competence, to evaluate incoming intelligence, to make special reports, and to provide guidance for the collecting branches of the agency.
- 10) It is not necessary to create a new agency. The nucleus of such an organization already exists in the Office of Strategic Services. It has the trained personnel, the foreign contacts, the administrative organization and the operating experience necessary to enable it to do this job effectively and without loss of time in getting started.
