					1. Thank you for the opportunity of reading the attached.
2.					2. Although there is nothing new in the various points of paramilitary operations suggested herein it is a well-organized restatement of the problems.
3.					3. One wonders, upon reflection, whether our concern should not be directed more toward policy. There comes a time, and in our relations with the USSR this appears to be now, when the use of military forces should not be openly approved and the Marines sent in. Lebanon is a good example. Furthermore, as the Soviets have only been influenced by power and are likely in the future to be only so influenced, such a policy decision appears to have a great many benefits. If the full decision is not to be taken, the next decision, following the Soviet pattern, is to send the Marines and openly organize them as "volunteers."
4.					4. All the above may be begging the question and certainly has little to do with the mission of training, but when I read a document that has so many implications I cannot help but wish that we would get back to the point of calling a spade a spade.
