Gentlemen:

[redacted] has found it increasingly difficult to perform her current duties because of a high blood pressure condition which appears to be growing progressively worse. In recent months, [redacted] has been troubled by attacks of vertigo, shortness of breath, and extreme fatigue which causes her much physical discomfort. The long ride to and from work each day, plus the walk into her office from the bus stop, have caused such severe exhaustion that she is frequently unable to perform even the simplest task without great effort.

It is my opinion that [redacted] is not able to perform her duties effectively. To the best of my knowledge her disability is not the result of vicious habits, intemperance, or misconduct.
