

ALLEN DULLES ASKS RESTRAINT WITH RUSSIANS

He Pleads for Coolness in Time of Crisis

Restraint in dealing with the insults of Russia and Red China was advocated here last night by Allen W. Dulles, director of the central intelligence agency and brother of Secretary of State Dulles.

He spoke before the annual meeting of the University of Chicago Law School Alumni association in the Morrison hotel. The tenor of his speech was similar to that delivered by his brother Monday night in the Conrad Hilton hotel.

Pleading for coolness in critical times, he urged "avoidance of the kind of thoughtless impatience or panic that could lead to a general atomic war."

Will Require Nerve

"The struggle that has been forced upon us will require cool nerve," he said. "It may require sacrifice of Americans and other free men in far and primitive corners of the globe.

"Eventually there is solid ground for hope on our side of the soviet iron curtain that is so militarily strong, so politically stable, so economically prosperous, that the soviets dare not attack and cannot subvert."

He said that the world's free community will exercise a powerfully attractive force on satellite peoples, and will show those not completely blinded by fanaticism the falsity of communist historical predictions.

May Wither Away

As a result, he said, may come the withering of "the fanaticism which holds together the international conspiracy." Then, he said, "peaceful co-existence" will become an actual condition to enjoy, rather than a slogan of which to be wary.

Morris Feiwell, vice president of the American National bank, was elected president of the association, succeeding Glen A. Lloyd, deputy Harold E. Stassen, Sanitized foreign operations administration.
