Untrustworthy

Allen W. Dulles, head of the Central Intelligence Agency, tells of a ship which was carrying a group of deported Communists back to the Soviet Union. One of the passengers died.

"Take the man out of 318 and bury him at sea," the captain ordered the first mate.

A short time later there was screaming and a splash. The captain summoned the mate and asked what was the trouble.

"Like you ordered, captain," the mate said. "I went to room 380 and the man put up a fight. He insisted that he wasn't dead, but we know you can't trust anything a Communist says."
