LET'S TRADE SOME SPIES, TOO

The notion has been kicking around Washington for quite a while that the United States and Soviet Russia ought to trade more and more official visitors, tourists, et al.

It is now expected that the President will soon approve a detailed policy under this head, as worked out recently in high Administration circles.

East-West
Visitors

We don't thrill to the idea; but it may profit this country some if Washington will be as realistic as Moscow surely will.

That is to say it's a cinch bet that the Soviets, among any visitors they allow to come here, will include plenty of spies, to contact Red agents already planted among us, start new spy nests, and so on.

So let's do likewise to the Reds—meaning let Allen W. Dulles' Central Intelligence Agency delegate a suitable number of spies to go each year as official or unofficial visitors to Russia. Let these agents encourage the anti-Commie underground, contact any U. S. spies now operating behind the Curtain, and the like.

In short, let's make these East-West visitor exchanges a two-way operation in all respects, not just in some
