MEMORANDUM FOR:

25X1A

1. I don't have too much trouble with this except that it is not consistent and reads a little bit like a wish book.
2. This Appendix says that mission oriented reporting lends itself to neat management. This is contrary to the appendix on backlogs. Further, it says that finished intelligence support exploitation is hard to schedule and manage because it tends to be ad hoc in nature. The work load paper in contrast indicated that this was a lot of level of effort operation. In any event, production schedules for NIE's, etc., are published and don't change a great deal.
3. I just can't buy the Section 5 material at all. This does not appear to be in general a summary or consensus from the preceding material, but rather just sort of leaps off into space. It probably is unrealistic in many areas also.
4. A great deal of the paper refers to automatic data handling processing, etc., as the Great Solution. I think a little bit of grey should be dabbed on to this white hope in view of the rather tragic experiences many have had in this area.

Comments on Appendix F.

1. This paper looks much better.
2. Early introduction of the two charts at the very end of the Appendix, which I have marked Table X and Table Y, might be very helpful. These two charts seem to present the picture pretty well, and I wonder what contribution the first, second and third phase tabulations noted as Annex A and B make.
3. I presume the discussion regarding the use of quantitative indications of the amount of product produced has been resolved.

I have looked at the draft outline and the draft appendices. I have recommended in general nit-picking editorial type recommendations. These are marked with paper clips on the papers. In addition, in those cases where I have general remarks about the papers, I have attached these to the front of the draft appendix.
