

1 November 1966

Ham:

1. I offer a suggestion on the attached manual and perhaps you may wish to mention it at the Staff meeting today.

25X1A 2. You have seen this KGB document, classified TS and dated 1965, detailing KGB operational doctrine for S & T espionage directed particularly against the U. S. Because of the substantial number of contracts we have with private enterprises and the relative inexperience of a number of DD/S&T personnel, perhaps [REDACTED] might call this manual to the attention of all security officers throughout the Directorate and suggest a means of wide dissemination of appropriate portions of the manual. I think one of the most important points is that although we in DD/S&T are remotely aware that the Soviet Union maintains a continual effort at subversion and espionage to collect intelligence information, here is proof positive with detailed requirements placed against U. S. scientific and technical intelligence activities.

25X1A 3. I have just singled out a few sections for you to call to [REDACTED] attention, but I think the whole manual is worth a quick reading. Chapter 3 which lists some specific aspects of S & T operations and includes the type of samples which might be obtained from leading electronic firms with whom we have dealings is a significant example.

Bill