CONFERENCE FOR BUSINESS EXECUTIVES

ON

FEDERAL GOVERNMENT OPERATIONS

April 28 - May 3, 1968

PROGRAM

Advanced Study Program -- The Brookings Institution
1775 Massachusetts Avenue, N.W.
Washington, D.C.

FOREWORD

This Conference for Business Executives on Federal Government Operations is part of an educational program conducted by The Brookings Institution designed to give current and emerging leaders in American industry a heightened awareness of the national environment in which business is challenged to survive and grow.

The Conference does not seek to develop "experts" in Federal Government affairs. Rather, its purpose is to provide -- through first-hand exposure to principal areas of Federal activity -- an educational experience which will sharpen the sensitivity of participants to:

1. The complexities of Federal government processes, public policy issues, and business-government relationships; and
2. The day-to-day responsibilities, pressures, and problems that confront legislative, judicial, and executive leaders in public life.

The principal methods employed to achieve this purpose include seminars, briefings, a reading program, and visits with governmental officials and scholars. Speakers are presented, not primarily to provide answers to the issues discussed, but to provoke critical thought and comment. Informal and frank discussion, without attribution or publicity, is encouraged to foster a maximum sharing of knowledge, views, and experience.

Motivating this effort is a conviction that government and business interests have become inseparably intertwined. Major problems of our society today require cooperative action for their effective solution. The success or failure with which we meet these problems depends not only on the performance of elected and appointed officials, but also upon the understanding, competence, intellectual preparedness, and effort of countless individuals occupying positions of trust and influence throughout the economy.

Sponsored by the Advanced Study Program of The Brookings Institution, the Conference is one of a series of educational endeavors undertaken in cooperation with the business community under the general direction of Walter G. Held, Senior Staff Member and Director of Business Programs. It will be directed by Peter Malof, Senior Staff Member and Associate Director of Business Programs.

The broadening of leaders in positions of public and private responsibility has never been more vital to the effective operations of our free society. It is hoped that the Conference will contribute to this end and to the building of greater understanding between major elements in our society.
