PRAISES '3-D FOREIGN POLICY' OF DULLES FAMILY

Ask Washington, at 11:30 A.M., over WNEW (Washington) and the NBC
Television Network:

HOLLY WRIGHT AND MEMBERS OF THE PROGRAM'S
PANEL WERE SEEN ON THE TELEVISION SCREEN
SEATED AT A TABLE.

HOLLY WRIGHT: "A question from Manchester, New Hampshire, asks, 'Would you please give me some information regarding Mr. Dulles's background? I've been told that his son is studying for the priesthood. Am I right or wrong?' Background on Mr. Dulles."

BILLY HENRY: "He has a long, long personal and family history as a very prominent Protestant layman. He's been a high official of the Council of Churches, I believe, and he's a very celebrated churchman. About his son, I don't know."

ESTHER VAN WAGONER TUFTY: "I think the son has gone into the priesthood, but I think we also, in mentioning Mr. Dulles's background, he's always recognized as a great international lawyer, and under another administration he was always an advisor, foreign advisor when it came to international relations, and I think those are the two things you always think of with Mr. Dulles. It's that he's an authority on international law and that he's a great Protestant layman."

RICHARD HARKNESS: "It's really, I think, a most interesting family. The Dulles father was a Presbyterian minister in upstate New York, an uncle, Robert Lansing, was Secretary of State, a Dulles grandfather was Secretary of State, and, as Esther brought out so well, Dulles has literally 'grown up' in this field of international relations, and particularly, as she brought out, he's a member, senior partner, of one of the largest international law firms. We don't actually know all about Dulles. I think, Holly, it's a '3-D' foreign policy because there's John Foster Dulles, who is Secretary of State, there's Allen Dulles, who's the head of the Central Intelligence Agency, and, then there is Eleanor Dulles, a sister, who is a European economist in the State Department, and between the three of them, a year ago, they pulled off what I thought was one of the most brilliant strokes, of American foreign policy, it hasn't come to light as yet, but it's the '3-D' foreign policy of the Dulleses."

WRIGHT: "Quite a family!"
