Release Hopes Rise for 20 Americans Held in Cuba

There are 20 Americans languishing in Cuban prisons, condemned there for years ahead. But now their release is expected shortly.

At least 16 of them are said to be held incommunicado. Some are reported weak, nervous, deeply despondent. Two are women.

The Swiss Ambassador in Havana, Emil Stadelhoffer, who recently visited some of them in the Isle of Pines prison compound, said of their mental outlook:

"An American without hope is impossible."

Prospects that they may be freed within a few weeks were seen by James B. Donovan, the New York lawyer who arranged the ransom of the Cubans captured in the Bay of Pigs invasion attempt.

Donovan said no goods would be exchanged in the case of the Americans. "It is an entirely different matter," he said, en route to Cuba for negotiations.

Most of the 20 who were at stake were charged with counter-revolutionary activity against the Fidel Castro regime, and sentenced to long terms, 10 to 30 years.

They are of varied temperaments and backgrounds—war veterans, a fireman, a youth who never "liked fighting," a photographer, a boyhood friend of Castro, a flying "soldier of fortune."

Reports of cryptic and audacious missions surrounded some of their arrests.

Parents, in some instances, were mystified by the affairs.

"He had no business in anything like that," said the father of one of them. Thomas Baker, 30, a Dothan, Ala., Army veteran and truck driver.

He and five others on a yacht in Havana Jan. 7, 1961, were charged with anti-Castro activities. They were sentenced to 30 years in prison.

Charles Gaddes, 31, of New York City, was sentenced to 30 years in prison after two years of confinement in a regional prison in Pinar del Rio.

kidnaping, eavesdropping on a Red Chinese news agency.

The facts remain uncertain but two already released American prisoners have told tales of risky, underground ventures.

Rundquist's Story

One of them, Rundquist, 38, a salesman and insurance agent, was in June after being tried for trying to fly out of Cuba.

It was a "soldier of fortune" named Eustace Danvers, 30, of Red Bank, Pa., who had been arrested in Easton, Pa., in 1958.

He was arrested in Cuba in 1961. He was sentenced to 30 years in prison.

They are Dario Probas and Alberto German Sanchez, both Puerto Ricans, and Ramon Williams, 42, married to a Cuban, who was sentenced to 30 years in prison for the same charges. Reason for the imprisonment of three other Americans has not been learned.

captured at the St. Johns Harbor in Havana. His wife lives in seclusion in Miami with their children. Besides Baker, the five seized on the boat in Havana Harbor are James D. Jeanne, 36, of Cedar Falls, N. C.; George R. Beck, 26, of North Mass.; Leonard Lewis, 41, 23, of Chicago; Alfred J. Green of Clover, N. C.; and Eustace Danvers, 30, of Red Bank, Pa.

Samuel Lankay, of New York City, was reported arrested on a forgery charge, then freed, and later rearrested. Cuban exiles says the order imprisoning him came directly from Castro's brother, Raul. One allegation was that he parachuted into Cuba.
