Coincidence and D.C. Jobs

WASHINGTON, July 13.—By the end of his fourth month in office, John Fitzgerald Kennedy has added more than 33,000 new employees to the Federal payrolls, with the number growing by the hour.

Not a few of these job holders, by coincidence, happen to be substantial contributors to the Democratic National Committee and the National Citizens for Kennedy-Johnson. To name a few:

Labor Lawyer Arthur Goldberg contributed $750 to the Democratic National Committee on June 28. He was named Secretary of Labor soon after Kennedy's election.

Washington Attorney Adam Yarmolinsky, for three years secretary of the notorious Fund for the Republic, chipped in $1,000 to Citizens for Kennedy-Johnson in the course of the campaign. He was appointed special assistant to the Secretary of Defense, in charge of personnel.

Norman S. Paul, an employee of the super-secret Central Intelligence Agency, contributed $1,300 to the Democratic National Committee last October. He was made assistant to the Secretary of Defense for legislative affairs.

Paul H. Nitze, Assistant Secretary for international security affairs is a former New Deal-Fair Deal policy-maker who gave $3,500 to the Democratic National Committee and Citizens for Kennedy-Johnson.

Capital lawyer Eugene Zuckert contributed $1,750 to the Democratic National Committee last year. Another refugee from the Roosevelt-Truman era, Zuckert was appointed Secretary of the Air Force.

Undersecretary of Treasury Henry Fowler is a veteran Washington lawyer who served under Roosevelt and Truman, leaving government when the Republicans came to power in 1953. He contributed $1,109 to the Kennedy-Johnson campaign last Fall.

Ralph Palewonsky contributed $1,000 to the Democratic National Committee, early in the campaign, January 26, to be exact, and was appointed governor of the Virgin Islands by Kennedy.

Walter Tobriner gave $1,000 to the Kennedy campaign fund on October 7. The President has selected him to serve on the District Board of Commissioners, the three-man board that runs the nation's capital.
