

U. S. Locates Former Agent After 9 Days

FRANKFURT, Germany

Jan. 28 (AP) — Reliable sources said today a former United States intelligence employe who had been reported missing has turned up at his home in Anaheim, Calif.

Martin B. Hebeling, 35, of San Francisco, recently resigned his top-secret intelligence job in Berlin. Army headquarters said he was sought after he had disappeared nine days ago.

Mr. Hebeling was a civilian employe with a classification equivalent to Army captain.

The Army said Mr. Hebeling, after resigning, was last seen January 19 at Helmstedt, the first West German town travelers from West Berlin reach after crossing 110 miles of Communist East Germany.

He was to return to the United States, the Army said, and was to have driven his car to Bremerhaven for shipment home. The car never was delivered to the port, leading to reports he was missing.

An Army spokesman said Mr. Hebeling as a private citizen after quitting his job was not obligated to report anywhere.
