Bank America Names Young An Executive

The appointment of a Burlingame man, Ralph F. Young, to vice president in Bank of America's corporate finance department at the head office in San Francisco was announced today by the bank's president, S. Clark Beise.

Young, who began his banking career at the Broadway-Burlingame branch eight years ago, receives the new title as a result of increased responsibilities in corporate loan supervision, Beise said.

Before advancing to assistant vice president in the department three years ago, Young was manager of one of the bank's branches in the Fresno area. He joined Bank of America on a special executive training program in 1954, receiving training at branches in Burlingame, Redwood City and South Palo Alto over a two-year period. He was assigned to branch service as a general lending officer and later as a manager before moving to corporate finance.

Young, a World War II air force veteran, graduated from the University of Michigan in 1948. He was with the U. S. State Department and Central Intelligence Agency for six years before joining Bank of America.
