RECALLS INTERVIEW WITH COLONEL GOLENIEWSKI

BARRY FARBER: "And before we proceed with the battle of adoptions, parents who want children -- children who want parents and need them -- in both directions -- let me just put a post-script on last night.

"We interviewed Colonel Goleniewski, Colonel Michael Goleniewski who people, who read the paper, will recognize as one of America's biggest catches in the cold war. He was a top man in Polish intelligence. He came over here secretly. He defected and joined the United States Intelligence in tracking down top Communists over here.

"Then Colonel Goleniewski vanished from the headlines and he came back right here on these microphones last night and announced that -- in a calm voice -- that he was really Alexei Romanoff, the son of the last Czar of Russia, and let us cross-examine him for well the duration of this program, approximately 45 minutes, minus commercial inserts, and we ended upright hanging over a cliff. We didn't know whether he was really the Czar's son or not by the time the program was over.

"Incidentally, he doesn't want to establish this claim, so he can go down in history books. There's a fortune of about 300 million dollars at stake.

"The Czar, you remember, was the wealthiest man in the world
