

WASHINGTON STAR

YOUNG BOSTON LAWYER IS ONE OF KENNEDY'S MOST CONTROVERSIAL AIDES

CPYRGHT

One of the youngest—and most controversial—of the “new frontiersmen” is 29-year-old Richard Goodwin. The young Bostonian is a Presidential adviser on Latin American affairs. Some political columnists have been harping on Goodwin's inexperience. They point out that he doesn't speak Spanish. That he'd never even set foot in Latin America at the time of his appointment. But there's no question that Goodwin is going places. And The Saturday Evening Post has spotlighted him as one of the “People on the Way Up.” You'll read about his early experiences in Washington. See a photo of Goodwin at work. And learn how the President views the critical attacks on his aide. Read this week's Saturday Evening Post. Pick up your copy today.

