The contemporary world is witnessing an uncompromising struggle between the revolutionary forces and imperialism. It is being carried out in economics, in politics and in the ideological sphere. Its aim is to open a way to humanity toward permanent peace, national independence, democracy, socialism and communism. One of the principal sectors of this struggle is ideology. The imperialists are concentrating an extraordinary amount of attention on it at this time. For them, ideological diversion has become one of the most important weapons against the socialist countries. Anticommunist ideologists feverishly seek new ways and forms of battle, are increasing their efforts to utilize conscience as a means of infiltrating an enemy ideology into the minds of our people.

Of course, we do not consider every clash of ideas an ideological diversion, although we know that the aim is the same: to restore capitalism in our country. However, the imperialists have built numerically and materially strong central points from which they direct their psychological war, expend considerable means on the illegal distribution of subversive printed matter and other material in communist countries, undervalue the results of our people's work, try to weaken our socialist conscience, exhort them to break our laws, etc.

Anticommunism has become the ideal platform of ideological diversion. According to imperialist planning, it should lead to a schism in the world communist movement, in socialist community life, to a dissolution of individual communist parties, to dissent among the workers, etc. Enemies of socialism are trying to incite all against all, invent and magnify conflicts and try to intrude into the smallest fissures.

The magnitude of the struggle on the ideological front in the last period of time has exceeded the capabilities of individual institutions and thus is being increasingly transferred to the patronage and
