A lame man with a glass eye was described last night as the person who was paid by Dominican Republic Generalissimo Rafael L. Trujillo to arrange the assassination of Jesus de Galindez.

Columbia Broadcasting System news commentator Edward R. Murrow said the man went under the names of "Felix Velasquez" and "El Cojo" (The Lame One) and last had been seen in New York City in February, 1956, one month before Professor de Galindez completed a lecture to a Columbia University night class and walked out into oblivion.

Murrow, in a coast-to-coast, hour-long documentary report carried here by WTOP-TV, detailed what is known of the last days of de Galindez and of Gerald L. Murphy, a Eugene, Ore., pilot, believed to have been murdered in the Dominican Republic because he knew too much.

With taped recordings of the voices of people actually involved in the case, the documentary made these points:

- John Joseph Frank, 42-year-old Washington attorney and former FBI agent indicted last week for failing to register as a Trujillo agent, helped pay for the chartered plane which is believed to have spirited de Galindez from a small Long Island airport to the Dominican Republic. (This account was first reported last week by John Secundari, chief of American Broadcasting Company's Washington bureau).

- Murphy, the young American pilot who is believed to have unwittingly flown the plane, told fellow American pilots in the Dominican Republic he had seen de Galindez alive there and could take them to see the professor "in 10 minutes."

- One Murphy colleague, keeping his voice unidentified, declared Murphy had been a Dominican government "agent" as well as a copilot for Dominican Airlines, and has been paid to take large sums of money to Cuba to finance a revolution.

- Murphy's fiancée, Sally Caire, a Pan American stewardess, said the young pilot had decided to sever his connections with the Dominican Republic last Thanksgiving and disappeared on the final trip to Ciudad Trujillo in which he had intended to clean up his personal business.

- Another friend reported on the CBS program that Murphy's decision to quit came after he had been offered a $250,000 "bonus" to bomb the Presidential palace in Havana.
