5. The Chairman opened with a stern ten minute admonition to the Committee regarding security. He commented that a story in yesterday's Washington Post regarding what had transpired in an executive session of the Committee couldn't have been more accurate or complete if he had written it himself. He said the Committee could not continue to operate if its security procedures were ignored and if a similiar leak occurred in the future he might follow the practice of the late Chairman Vinson where no one but the Chairman knew what was going on. He said that if there was further trouble about security he would put every member under oath and interrogate him. Mr. King supported him and Mr. Gubser said that such leaks inevitably inhibit Committee witnesses and thus cut off valuable information from the Committee.

6. Mr. Carver then delivered the prepared statement, text of which is on file in the Office of Legislative Counsel. Questions and answers in the ensuing discussion are reported in the Committee transcript, also on file in OLC.

7. Follow-up action:

a. Mr. Clancy asked how long Agency reports had shown in excess of 500 tanks in the North Vietnamese inventory, and also asked for the precise figures on how many North Vietnamese regulars were in South Vietnam now, and how many were there as of 1 March of this year. Mr. Carver promised to provide the answers.

b. Mr. Stratton said he was still puzzled by the widely varying reports on the effects of the bombing of North Vietnam logistical targets and would like a detailed briefing on the subject. He said there was a widespread impression that CIA felt such bombing was almost completely ineffective, but he found it difficult to believe this was true. I told Mr. Stratton we would be glad to arrange a private briefing on this subject and asked him to let me know when it would be convenient.

c. Mr. Young and Mr. Spence asked if they could be provided with copies of statements from the U.S. press and by U.S. public figures which had been exploited by the North Vietnamese for propaganda purposes to illustrate the unpopularity of the war in the U.S. Mr. Carver said he saw no reason why we could not provide such material.
