1. [redacted] called with reference to our proposed memorandum of understanding. I told him that we would try to have a draft ready by the time he comes down late next week. Unfortunately, I found that [redacted] had not started the draft yet and is on leave until about 1 August. I instructed [redacted] to get going on this without delay.

2. With reference to the three consultants that Training planned to employ for the summer seminar and who were turned down for security reasons, Houston tells me that, in reviewing the files, there is little doubt that [redacted], now separated from the Agency, made definite commitments and these people will have a claim which we will probably have to pay.

3. [redacted] reports that his trip to New York to consult with [redacted] on our contract with them has resolved all of the matters to [redacted] satisfaction. However, the auditor up there who belongs to Saunders appears somewhat inadequate. In view of the short duration of this contract and this auditor's involvement therein, I told Saunders to keep him on the job, but to send someone up at least every week to see how he was getting along.

4. Talked with Macy of the Bureau of the Budget with reference to our new building. He indicated that Lawton or Staats would call the Director in the very near future.
