DIARY NOTES

DD/S

14 May 1962

1. Jack Earman was in to review with me his proposed inspection program for 1962. Included in it was a plan to study the arrangements which the Agency has set up for advising female employees under twenty-one years of age as to places to live, personal conduct, etc.

2. [REDACTED] Chief of the [REDACTED], was in to say good-by. He is going to retire next month under the Agency's policy of voluntary retirement when eligible for a full annuity. He expects to continue working elsewhere and has three possibilities lined up. One is with the Office of Civil and Defense Mobilization, one with General Services Administration, and one with Precision Instruments. I invited him to use me as a reference if he cared to do so, and I asked [REDACTED] to pave the way for him at OODM so that he could disclose to appropriate people his Agency affiliation.

3. Bob Ayers, the Vice-President and General Manager of Government Services, Inc., telephoned me today and again Tuesday morning, 15 May, to discuss GSA's request that he open the North cafeteria for breakfast. He said that labor costs alone would be $51 a day and that this certainly would be a losing proposition for him. I told him that I was not too sympathetic with the requests of the GSA and other employees who were petitioning for this service but that I was certainly in no position to say that they shouldn't have it. At the same time I was firm in my position that we could not compromise our security practices in order to allow them in the South cafeteria.
