None to report.

OTHER ITEMS:

1. INTELLIGENCE TERMS IN ARABIC:

More than a year ago NE Division spoke to us about having one of their Headquarters staff agents translate our Selected List of Intelligence Terms into Arabic. We agreed, but heard 25X1A9a nothing further from NE. On 23 March phoned to say that he had been assigned the task of pushing through this translation and asked if OTR had any objection to the project. He wants to give the French version of the glossary to a field asset to translate. Because of the document's SECRET classification. Mr. will deliver it to the agent to CI/OA for approval in bits and pieces. We referred Mr. and requested copies of the finished product.

In the process he compiled a file of all pertinent documents and cables, together with memos for the record covering each of the many and occasionally tortuous steps in the process of administrative preparation. This file will be of substantial value to whoever handles this task for the next group. Meanwhile, "Pop" and the trainees are ready to go and. barring any last-minute complications, will be flying the at 0500 hours on 1 April.

Glossary of Operational Terminology. We attribute this sudden upsurge to the requirement levied on the DOD to produce a draft glossary of counterinsurgency terms for inter-agency discussion. Also as reported last week, we received the JCS's version in thermofax with a request for comments. (There was a SNAFU in the mails and Ben had to send us a second copy, though the first finally arrived. This, with the approval of C/OS, we sent to We are planning to have more copies made before the thermofax fades away, and will send one to DTR.) Ben, in his Southern Gentlemanly manner, said he would like us to confine our comments to substance; in less diplomatic terms, "Don't nitpick the syntax." With a gargantuan effort we controlled our impulse to remove the "and/or's" and the "to include's" and limited ourselves to pointing out what we considered diversities in Agency and Pentagon interpretation. We noted with approval that the JCS adopted verbatim our definitions
