MEMORANDUM FOR: Director

FROM

: Inspector General

SUBJECT

: Are CIA Employees Reporting Fully

to the DCI?

1. This memorandum is in response to your request for background information concerning the question raised at the 27 February breakfast with Senator Bellmon's group. The question was how you would know if CIA is reporting to you the things you should know. This reviews the origin of the present reporting requirements, how they first became known publicly, and where things now stand. There is a recommendation for your consideration in paragraph 9.

2. On 9 May 1973 DCI Schlesinger issued instructions to all employees that they report any activities that appeared to them as being outside the Agency's legislative charter. On the same date he appeared in open session before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Intelligence, where he described his instructions that day to employees to report quosical activities, which was reported in the press at the time as well as on a recurring basis thereafter.

3. DCI Colby was asked a number of times if he was sure that he knew what was going on in the Agency. His reply took various forms, usually referring to the instructions to employees that they report any questionable activities—that there be "no surprises"—and his confidence that he knew those things he should know. He also referred to instructions issued by him in August 1973 setting new limits on Agency activity.

Approved For Release 2001/04/05 : CIA-RDP79-00498A000300040017-6

AND THE PROPERTY OF THE PROPER

4. In addition to the above, DCI Colby raised the matter a number of times at our morning meetings, reiterating to his Deputies the need to keep in mind the requirement for reporting. The Employee Conduct Handbook--required annual reading for all employees--was changed to include the following statement:

"Any CIA employee who believes that he has received instructions which in any way appear inconsistent with the CIA legislative charter will inform the Director of Central Intelligence immediately."

The continued publicity given past Agency activities and this clear requirement to report questionable activities has heightened employee sensitivity to the question. There is reason for confidence in the belief that past inhibitions for reporting such activities have been overcome.

- 5. In addition to the clear responsibility of employees to report questionable activities, the Agency's internal review mechanism has been reinforced to detect improprieties when they exist. The Inspector General's staff is in the final phase of increasing from five to twenty inspectors, and a program of reviewing all Agency activities for possible improprieties or illegality is underway.
- 6. As the question about knowledge can be expected again it might be useful to review some of the incidents that have given rise to it. The 9 May 1973 instructions by DCI Schlesinger him with technical support in the summer of 1971. Although the profile had been approved by DCI Helms, its relationship to that which became known as "Watergate" was not recognized until May 1973.

STATINTL

had no connection with any CIA assignment. This incident, however, led to the resignation of the Director of Security. Finally, the Senate Select Committee inquiry into allegations of assassination plotting revealed that DCI McCone--a Director from outside the Agency--had not been told of the plotting against Castro. It doubtless is one or more of these incidents that prompts the continuing questions about the possible lack of complete reporting to the DCI.

- 8. Present policy appears to be well known and understood, that Agency employees are to report any questionable activities known to them, either to the DCI or the IG. Requirements for OGC review of new activities, and the augmented inspection capability, reinforce the likelihood that activities not recognized and reported by employees will be reviewed at their inception or detected in the regular program of inspections. The Audit Staff's program audits should also assist in this regard.
- 9. We believe that it is appropriate and desirable that you restate on your own behalf the general requirement for all employees to report to you any questionable activities that come to their attention, taking the form of a notice to all employees.
