a. This concept recognizes that emergencies may occur which affect the employee or the employee's immediate family who are at the post with him. The employee can purchase Emergency Travel Insurance and name himself and/or the other family members with him at the post to provide for the contingency of emergency travel which may not qualify for payment by ODYOKE. For example, the employee may become critically ill and be evacuated to PBPRIME or to ODYOKE medical facilities at an intermediate location. Normally, his travel expenses would qualify for payment under KUBARK [REDACTED] however, the employee's wife would have to assume the travel cost as a personal expense if she wished to be with her husband unless she qualified as an attendant. Under the provisions of the Emergency Travel Plan if the employee is the first named he can designate his spouse as the person to make the trip. In the event he becomes critically ill and must be evacuated, his wife, relying on the insurance coverage, can accompany him. A similar use can be made of the Emergency Travel Plan if the emergency involves the family members at the post with the employee. By naming these family members and paying the additional premium, the employee can be assured of payment of travel expenses if he wishes to accompany a critically ill family member.
