24 September 1973	Lebanon	Unknown persons tried to blow up the oil pipeline of the Tapline Company in the An-Nabitiyah district of Lebanon. The explosion made a hole in the ground without causing any damage to the pipeline. Security has been increased on the company's installations. (UNCLASSIFIED)

Lone Gunman Attempts to Hijack KLM Jet

On 2 October, a man identified as Franz-Josef Stremmer of Kirchellen, West Germany, attempted to hijack to Bonn a KLM Royal Dutch DC-9 jet bound from Duesseldorf to Amsterdam, according to the Associated Press. A Dutch police spokesman stated that Stremmer smuggled a gun on board the plane, used it to threaten a stewardess, and then demanded that the plane be turned around and flown to Bonn, where negotiations would be conducted with West German officials.

Stremmer stated his demands in a rather confused note which he gave to the stewardess. In the note he demanded the resignation of West German Premier Willy Brandt, the release of Ulrike Meinhoff and other members of the Baader Meinhoff terrorist group who are currently being held in West German prisons, and stated that he was hijacking the plane to protest "the inhuman crimes perpetrated by the German Secret Service against me and my family." The note further stated that any attempt to overpower Stremmer would "result in the unavoidable death of all crew members and passengers aboard."

The pilot changed his course for Bonn and went back to talk with the hijacker. Stremmer was disarmed, and the plane was put back on course and landed safely at Amsterdam, where Stremmer was taken into custody by Dutch police. The police spokesman stated that the 27 passengers on board the aircraft were not aware of the incident while the hijack was in progress. (UNCLASSIFIED)

Magazine Interview with a Leader of the "Eagles of the Palestinian Revolution"

The Damascus Middle East News Agency stated on 3 October 1973 that a Lebanese magazine had interviewed a leader of the "Eagles of the Palestinian Revolution," the Arab terrorist group that claimed responsibility for the 28 September attack at Marchegg, Austria. The magazine quoted him as saying that the Marchegg operation was not the first attack by this group but had been preceded by several others which, although not publicized, were all successful. The theater of operations of the Eagles, he added, is Europe and there are Eagle cells in several European cities. The Eagles leader explained that many of the Eagles are educated and cultured individuals and that one of the Marchegg terrorists possesses an advanced degree in mechanics and the other terrorist has a law degree. He also claimed that an "electronic brain" was used in planning the operation. (Comment: There is no confirmation that the "Eagles of the Palestinian Revolution" actually exists. Fedayeen terrorist groups have been fabricating new names to cover their operations, and most reporting indicates that the Marchegg attack was carried out by Sa'iqa. See Articles.)

Far East

TARGET	PLACE	DATE	PLANNED ACTION
Aircraft	Unknown Possibly Far East	Unknown	 A news story from Jakarta, Indonesia, claiming that the "Okudaira Group" is planning to hijack a plane, appeared in the 4 October Japanese press. The information reportedly came from Indonesian airline officials who sourced it to an airline company in Singapore. Members of the "Okudaira Group" were involved in the 1972 Lod airport massacre. (Comment: This could be a resurfacing of old information concerning Japanese extremists' plans to hijack aircraft; it also could be connected with a current threat against Israeli aircraft in Vienna or Rome. See Section III.) (UNCLASSIFIED)

Argentine Airlines Plane Hijacked

On 20 October an Argentine Areolinas 737 jet bound from Buenos Aires to Salta, Argentina, with 41 passengers aboard was hijacked by four armed terrorists who claimed to be Tupamaros, according to press reports. The plane eventually ended up in the small Bolivian border town of Yacuiba, whether by accident or design is not clear, and after approximately two days of negotiations the hijackers surrendered to Bolivian authorities, presumably after being granted safe conduct to Cuba, although this point is unclear at present.

Although reporting on the incident is sketchy, the story emerging from a variety of press sources indicates that the hijackers, two men and two women who were armed with a 32-caliber pistol, a 22-caliber carbine and two 22-caliber pistols, took over the aircraft and directed it to Tucuman, Argentina, where Argentinan authorities refused to refuel the plane and refused to negotiate with the hijackers. For reasons which are not clear, the plane left Tucuman and landed at Yacuiba, 12 kilometers from the Argentine border. The plane was trapped at Yacuiba because the airport runway was too short for the plane to take off, and because the airport did not have the type of fuel the 737 required. Airport authorities stated that it was a miracle that the plane landed safely.

After the plane landed it was surrounded by 200 Bolivian troops armed with submachine guns. The hijackers demanded that the Bolivian government provide them with a plane to carry them to Cuba. The government refused but offered the hijackers safe conduct out of Bolivia. The hijackers let 37 of the passengers go but kept two Argentine deputies, a French scientist and the pilot and copilot as hostages, and threatened to kill the hostages one by one if their demands were not met.

President Hugo Banzer of Bolivia stated that he was handling the negotiations personally and threatened to mount a military operation against the aircraft if the hijackers did not accept the Bolivian government's offer. The Argentine government steadfastly refused to take part in any negotiations and asked the Bolivian government to detain the hijackers and turn them over to Argentine authorities.

The negotiations were carried on through the Bolivian Consul at Salta. At one point the hijackers asked for the intervention of the international press, and it was reported that the Bolivian Minister of Information and Sports and a group of foreign correspondents were on their way to Yacuiba to witness the exchange of hostages for safe-conduct documents. According to the Argentine press, the hijackers have surrendered their weapons and the hostages, accepted the Bolivian offer, and as far as is known, are on their way to Cuba.
