SUBJECT : Presentation

1. On 12 January 1966 at 1400, representatives of [redacted] will make a presentation in the DD/S&T Conference Room, 6E60. The subject of the presentation is "The Value of Various Types, Quantities and Qualities of Intelligence Information". The device used to measure the value of various levels of intelligence is a series of strategic war games in which actual forces are pitted against estimated forces and targets by both sides. The dollar values of various degrees of accuracy of estimating forces and targets are computed by costing the additional strike forces which must be bought to give a constant game outcome as the accuracy of the estimates is changed. Illustrations will be given with respect to missile reliability, missile location, and several other weapon system characteristics.
