GENERAL

1. Britain warns Egyptian regime of possible intervention:

Great Britain is informing the new Egyptian regime that while it has no wish to intervene, it will do so if necessary to protect British lives. Britain is assuring General Nagib that the precautionary preparations which it is now undertaking are not directed against the Egyptian armed forces. A message to Prime Minister Ali Maher advises against ending martial law or holding elections.

The Churchill cabinet has also ordered that the forces which would occupy Cairo under the long-standing plan for emergency occupation of the Nile delta cities be placed on a 48-hour alert basis. The alert for Alexandria was left at 96 hours. The cabinet, aware that the Egyptian insurgents are apprehensive of British reactions, centered its discussion on the need to avoid "ostentatious or provocative" moves, according to a high Foreign Office official.

Comment: This is the first time since the 26 January riots that Britain has formally communicated to an Egyptian government its readiness to intervene in any way.

SOUTH ASIA

4. Comment on strength of Sheikh Abdullah's government in Kashmir:

Kashmiri Premier Sheikh Abdullah made no major concession affecting his present semi-autonomous position in the recent New Delhi conference on relations between India and Indian-held Kashmir.

50X1

This is good evidence of the strength Abdullah has developed in the past three years -- a strength not entirely to India's liking. It further demonstrates that Abdullah must also be considered in efforts to resolve the Kashmir issue.

NEAR EAST - AFRICA

5. Former Minister of Interior warns of further Egyptian violence:

50X1

Former Minister of Interior Maraghi Pasha states that General Mohammed Nagib is a mere figurehead for a group of the most extreme elements in the Egyptian Army. Maraghi alleges that the insurgents are determined to revert to violence to achieve their objectives, among which are the expulsion of the British by force and the establishment of a "Communist-Moslem Brotherhood dictatorship."

Ambassador Caffery believes that Maraghi's allegations may be exaggerated in an effort to encourage Anglo-American military intervention. Caffery warns, however, that the possibility of extremist influence on the new movement cannot be overlooked.

Comment: An alliance between Nagib and the Moslem Brotherhood or the Wafd Party would offer a new threat to moderate government and to Western interests. Any cooperation on the part of the small, outlawed Communist Party would be on its initiative and wholly opportunistic.

King Farouk's position remains in jeopardy as Nagib steadily consolidates his hold on Egypt's internal affairs.

WESTERN EUROPE

7. West Berliners may be prohibited from buying in East Berlin:

The head of the East German labor unions is quoted to the effect that an ordinance will be issued shortly forbidding West Berlin residents to make any purchases in East Berlin.

50X1

Comment: Such an order would work severe hardship on West Berlin's lower-income groups, which buy much of their food and other household items in East Berlin. The East German Government, in an announcement on 16 July, took a step in this direction by restricting fruit and vegetable purchases in East Berlin to holders of ration tickets.
