ETHIOPIA: Seminar on Eritrea

25X1

 The offer yesterday of the two main Eritrean guerilla groups--the Eritrean Liberation Front and the Eritrean People's Liberation Front--to begin direct and unconditional peace talks with Ethiopia is an apparent effort to upstage the Ethiopian Government, which has just concluded an 11-day seminar to drum up mass support for its policy of military confrontation in Eritrea. The insurgents' proposal, unveiled at a joint press conference in Beirut, reiterated their longstanding position that any settlement of the 17-year-old conflict must be based on self-determination for the Eritreans. The Mengistu regime has steadfastly rejected this and appears firmly resolved to pursue the military option in Eritrea.

 The guerrillas are trying to capitalize on widespread international opposition to an Ethiopian offensive in Eritrea, as well as almost certainly to undermine Ethiopian efforts to place blame for the lack of negotiations squarely on the Eritreans. In a seminar session last week, Lt. Col. Berhanu Bayeh, the ruling council member responsible for foreign affairs, publicly disclosed a series of contacts between the government and the EPLF, including several recent meetings in East Berlin. These talks failed, according to Berhanu, because of the guerrillas' unreasonable demands for complete independence.

 The 800 to 1,000 delegates to the government's seminar included representatives of many sectors of Ethiopian political, diplomatic, and bureaucratic life. By associating these leaders directly with its efforts in Eritrea, the Mengistu regime clearly hoped to mobilize public opinion and to avoid internal opposition if the planned military drive in Eritrea goes badly.

25X1 [redacted] The government emphasized ideological justification for its policy toward Eritrea in order to appeal to Communist countries and to make it more difficult for the Soviets and the Cubans to withhold support--particularly if the Ethiopian offensive in Eritrea falters. It was also an implicit rebuke to the Soviet concept of a federation of Ethiopia, Eritrea, Somalia, and Djibouti. By attempting to discredit the rebels' Marxist credentials, the Ethiopians probably also hoped to undercut some of the ideological rationale behind radical Arab support for the Eritreans and to portray any such support as reactionary. LEBANON: Internal Feuding

25X1 [redacted] A large-scale raid was carried out before dawn on Wednesday against five predominantly Greek Catholic villages in the northern Bekaa Valley. About 40 men were abducted; some were released, but at least 22 were killed. [redacted]

[redacted]

[redacted] The Phalangist militias led by Bashir Jumayyil are almost certain to react violently. Although those responsible have not been firmly identified, the suspicion of Syrian complicity is widespread, making Syrian troops prime targets. Syrian-Christian clashes in February and May were bloody and hard to bring under control, resulting in heavy Syrian casualties and building up a backlog of scores to settle on both sides. The situation is particularly volatile because the only troops available to contain such clashes are Syrian, and their intervention is as likely to aggravate as it is to calm.

[redacted] The cycle of violence and revenge that has become established in Lebanon over the past few months is also highlighting the impotence of the Sarkis government, which has been keeping such troops as it possesses on the sidelines. Since many are supporters of the Phalanges, they could hardly be expected to play a constructive role in any case. Rival Christian factions, which are engaging in a gangland-style struggle for power and money, have had few restraints on their escalating activities.

[redacted] Earlier reporting had indicated that Syrian President Assad intended to try to steer clear of involvement in any revenge for the Franjiyah murder, but that Rifaat Assad had other ideas. Any Syrian participation in the latest incident may well have been Rifaat acting on his own, and cooler heads may still do what they can to keep the Syrians from becoming further embroiled. The leadership may not succeed, however, particularly if the Syrians find themselves the targets of concerted Phalangist attacks. [redacted]

USSR-CHINA: Border Talks

25X1 [redacted] Last month, the Chinese accused the Soviets of deliberately provoking a border incident when a contingent of naval border guards entered Chinese territory and allegedly fired on local inhabitants. China dismissed Soviet expressions of regret over the incursion and briefly exploited it for propaganda purposes. [redacted]

NAMIBIA: Response to Demarche

25X1 [redacted] The South Africans acted in response to a Western demarche last week that was intended to bridge the gap between the Western settlement plan that Pretoria accepted in April and the latest negotiating position of the South-West Africa People's Organization. According to Tanzanian President Nyerere, when the SWAPO leaders met with the frontline presidents in

Luanda in mid-June, they agreed to accept the Western settlement plan with one revision. The SWAPO leaders insisted that the Western stipulation that the South African residual force be restricted to "Grootfontein or Oshavello or both" be revised to "one or two locations south of Windhoek."

25X1 [] The October state elections in Hesse, which may decide the fate of the Bonn coalition, thus add some sense of urgency to the tax cut negotiations. A victory there by the Christian parties could give the opposition parties the two-thirds majority in the Bundesrat necessary to block most federal legislation. []

INDIA: Home Minister Fired

25X1 [redacted] In a surprise move, Desai requested the resignations of both Singh, the second most important man in the cabinet and an important leader of the ruling Janata Party, and Singh's close associate, Health Minister Raj Narain. The cabinet gave Desai absolute discretion to fire both men.

25X1 [redacted] The cabinet vote represented a shift in intraparty alliances. Previously, the Jana Sangh, the best organized faction within Janata, had entered into local alliances with Charan Singh's supporters in the northern Indian states. With the expulsion of Singh from the cabinet, the Jana Sangh seems to have lined up firmly with Desai. The US Embassy in New Delhi believes Singh has very few firm supporters, and the government may continue in power with a secure parliamentary majority. [redacted]

URUGUAY: Military Purge

25X1 [redacted]

[redacted] The Army, which has controlled Uruguay since 1973, has long been split over the issue of political liberalization--even though it has tried to maintain a public appearance of unity. This internal strife has thwarted all efforts to make preparations for the election scheduled for 1981.

[redacted] Early this year, Alvarez promised to take steps toward an election and to foster "economic well-being, authentic democratic institutions, and unrestricted enjoyment of individual rights." His efforts have been stymied, however, by strong opposition among conservatives in the military. For the past several months, Alvarez has been the target of a smear campaign that has accused him, among other things, of being a tool of the US Embassy.

[redacted] Alvarez is scheduled to retire next February and, although he insists he will exercise his full authority until then, the other generals could increasingly treat him as a "lame duck." [redacted]

BRAZIL: Drought Slashes Output

25X1 [redacted] Southern Brazil's worst drought on record has reduced production of several major crops by more than 15 percent this year. We expect that Brazil--the world's third largest agricultural exporter--will lose $1.2 billion in exports this year and that imports of food products will increase by $400 million. Brazil should nevertheless be able to avoid serious balance-of-payments problems.

25X1 [redacted] The drought that has plagued south-central Brazil since late 1977 has cut production of most major grain crops as well as cotton and coffee. Soybean production has fallen 22 percent this year, and corn production is estimated at 14.1 million tons--down from 18.8 million tons in 1977. We also expect cotton production to decline 16 percent and rice an estimated 6 percent from the 1977 levels. Coffee production will probably be slightly higher than a year ago, but down from earlier estimates.

25X1 [redacted] The number of cattle, which we had expected to increase due to higher prices, is now likely to decline as a result of reduced capacity of dry pasturelands. An outbreak of African swine fever has already spread from the state of Rio de Janeiro to the south, where the bulk of Brazil's 40 million swine herd is located.

25X1 [redacted] Brazilian imports of agricultural products will increase more than $400 million in 1978 as a result of production losses. Wheat imports will increase by a million tons, while corn and beef, normally export items, will be imported in an effort to hold the line on prices and to meet domestic requirements.

25X1 [redacted] In order to prevent a serious deterioration of its trade balance, Brazil has maintained tight import restrictions and encouraged exports of manufactured goods by continuing its massive subsidy program and accelerating the pace of cruzeiro devaluations. CIA estimates that, as a result of the effects of the drought on the trade balance, Brazil's current account deficit will increase slightly this year to about $4.7 billion, compared to $3.9 billion in 1977. Treasury, however, believes that the 1978 current account deficit is likely to be closer to $5.2 billion.

25X1 [redacted] Despite the agricultural losses, Brazil should be able to register around a 4-percent increase in real GDP this year, slightly below last year's performance. The continued growth in GDP reflects the resiliency of the economy, which should be able to rely on the manufacturing sector to supply the impetus to growth. The agricultural setbacks nonetheless spell trouble for Brazil's anti-inflation program; the government will probably be unable to hold inflation below last year's rate of 39 percent. [redacted]

USSR-Africa

25X1 [redacted] Last Friday, several Soviet officials in conversations with US Embassy officers also struck hard at the idea of an inter-African force and implied that Moscow was determined to continue its current policies in Africa.

[redacted] The Soviets are citing the inter-African plan in order to influence African opinion against the West, but it is also possible that Soviet leaders are concerned that the formation of any alliance on the continent will work against their long-term interests there. [redacted]

Ethiopia-Somalia

25X1

[redacted] Ethiopian planes attacked Belet Wen in central Somalia yesterday--the third attack on Somalia in a week. The raids, which President Siad has protested to the Organization of African Unity, are in response to continuing Somali-backed insurgent activity in the Ogaden. [redacted]

Sudan-IMF

25X1

[redacted] Sudan has complied with all the terms needed to obtain a $63 million loan from the International Monetary Fund. The loan will help to finance Sudan's current-account deficit--estimated at $300 million this year. It is seeking additional assistance from the wealthy Arab countries.

Approved For Release 2007/03/08 : CIA-RDP79T00975A030700010084-8

25X1 [redacted] The economic reform package implemented as a condition of the IMF loan includes a 20-percent devaluation and an austerity budget designed to reduce inflation. Sudan is also instituting agricultural reforms in order to aid exports and make Sudanese products--cotton and peanuts--more competitive on world markets. These measures will not have much effect for a few years, however, and until their impact is felt, Sudan will continue to require balance-of-payments assistance. [redacted]

25X1 [redacted] Until mid-1974 the SDR was tied to the US dollar through its respective "gold content." Since then the IMF has defined the SDR's value in terms of 16 major currencies to permit the SDR to fluctuate in value against the dollar and other currencies, under the floating exchange rate regime that emerged in August 1971.

25X1 [redacted] The 16 currencies in the SDR basket are chosen on the basis of the importance of IMF member countries in world exports. Special weighting will continue to be given the US dollar.
