KODACHROMES

2	5X1	File No. 1,	Bangkok
		" # 7	View of Rajadamern Avenue taken in the afternoon looking south. This road runs between king's palace and parliament and is a copy of Champs d'Eysses (Paris). Business buildings can be see and to the left of center is the old city wall. The direction of the photo is: from the river toward the business section of the city.
		" #8	State cooperative store. Local merchants sell their products at what they consider to be a fair price. Anyone can sell higher or lower but the people know they can get a fair price at the government cooperative store. Photo taken in the afternoon.
25X	1	" #9 	Typical stretch of middle-class Bangkok native houses bordering canal. Each one has its own bridge and farms. Photo taken in the afternoon looking north about two miles from the center of the city.
		" #10	Typical street scene showing Buddhist priests in orange with begging bags, student in the center looking at the priests, and two policemen to the left of center. Cart is an ambulating restaurant. Monument to Democracy can be seen in background. Taken same time of day looking south.
		" ‡ 11	Newer side of Rajadamern Avenue. That is had hoped this street would become the business center, but the people are not used to this idea so it is not getting the business. It is afternoon and street is practically desolate. People still prefer to by in a hand-to-mouth manner using shopping bags.
25X1		. !	Chinese merchants' street on their only one-day holiday (New Year's Day) looking south toward the Giant Swing (Hindu religion
		#15	View of portion of Thai navy and navy yard. Chao Menon Phya River looking north. It's about 15 miles above the river bar.
			Building showing government information center on right. In foreground typical vegetable washing by natives in canal prior to selling them in the market. About 1 P.M.
		" # 19	View of a floating fruit market taken in the A.M. from the land side.
		" #21	Same as Photo #12, a market street.
		" #24 ·	Typical Thai (flee) market.

Photo #35 Typical Thai wealthy house showing open area below, living quarters on first floor, and top floor only for ventilation and coolness. House is surrounded by sapling bamboo poles and is situated about five miles from the center of town.

#36 Typical upper or middle-class house about five miles from the center of town. Lawn in right-hand corner shows water-catching trough piped from home. Note two-car garage. No glass or screen used in most Thai houses.

- Photo #2 Junction of new road (to the right) and main Chinese section street. Taken about midday.
 - the one of 300 or 400 hydrants in downtown section of Bangkok from which house water is taken. Picture shows woman employed as water bearer for three or four cents per can. This supplements the frequent use of canal water for household purposes. Streets are paved with curbing. Curbs and undersurface drains are becoming more common. Pressure of hydrants is fairly substantial. Alluvial plain is sour because salt water can back into it. Artesian wells are found here. A better grade of water can be found 300 or 400 feet below the surface of the earth.
 - #10 Chinese gold shop in rear. At front can be seen Thai vegetable and fruit stands. Note filth on streets.
 - #13 Shop beggar on street. In all only about 12 or 13 of these shop beggars were seen in Thai during my eight months' stay there.
 - #14 Poor section market area. This is a very typical scene and miles of the same can be seen throughout the city. It serves the poor people. Notice filth around the stands and street.
 - #15 Typical scene of filth seen for miles along the Bangkok canal. This photo was taken in the downtown section of the city and the native homes can be seen.
- #17 Additional filth in canal showing typical native construction about one mile north of the Golden Mount. Picture was taken in the afternoon.
 - #23 Dry goods (flee) market in Thai.

i	Photo #1	Canal section on river opposite from Bangkok going into jungle. This is an early morning picture looking west. Note the intersection of two canals, telephone lines, and typical crossroads store.
	#3	Typical wharf scene on canal with typical vessels. Start of jungle in upper right-hand corner. Boat with canopy is either a taxi or ferry.
	#4	Typical floating market scene at edge of jungle on canal.
	# 5	School river bus.
	#6	Another canal waterfront scene showing freight and passenger boat from interior and also showing thatched roof broken. This is typical of roof construction. Modern roof construction in Thai follows sectional lines.
25X1	#8	Early morning going north on west side of river showing jungle cut by canal.

	#12	Another typical house showing increased use of corrugated tin siding. Source of tin probably Japan. Natives on boat are bartering for goods which is customary marketing procedure. Little if any money is ever used. This is typical of interior Thai.
25X1	#14	Typical native rice boat showing family quarters at rear. Note helmsman on shelf. Note also corrugated top to rice boat. Corrugated tin also used for roofing.
	#16	Typical jungle clearing along side of caual or river to be used for truck garden products, e.g. carrots, sweet potatoes, cabbages, as well as bananas and coconuts.
	#18	Additional view of canal within Bangkok city limits. Note grade of bank; roads on both sides of canal. City canal maximum depth eight feet gradually decreasing as time extends after dredging.
()	#21	Floating fruit market within Bangkok.
	# 28	One hundred miles north and slightly east above Bangkok. Boats bring wood and rice down to Bangkok. It is an overnight or a full-day's trip. This waterway is a river.
	#29	River scene north of Sara Buri showing the typical river craft with wooded high banks.
25X1	#31	Scene of farmer taking rice to government rice monopoly mill. Rice farmer's home in rear.
25X1	#32 	Scene about 100 miles north of Bangkok showing river loading of charcoal wood for transportation to city. Twenty-five foot bank near Sara Buri. Photo taken from a bridge.
	#3 4	Picture of a bullock cart used everywhere in Thai. Width of wheel and height of axle are to provide passage during monsoon period. Near Sara Buri.
	# 35	View of mountains to the northeast of Bangkok near Sara Buri (possibly below it because of river). Shows the end of the alluvial plain of which Bangkok is center. Not much vegetation.
