Effect of Prague Trial and Moscow Arrests

1. Bulgarian Jews were neither surprised nor frightened by the recent trial in Prague. This trial was considered to be a propaganda act of the Czechoslovakian rulers and was not considered to be the start of a campaign against the Jews. The arrest of the Soviet doctors, on the other hand, panicked the Bulgarian Jews and was interpreted as the beginning of a campaign against the whole race. It was feared that the Jewish emigration to Israel would be stopped and that Jews in countries controlled by the USSR would be arrested en masse on orders from Moscow.
