21. [redacted] LIAISON Received a call from Hugh Wolfe,^{25X1} of the Congressional Research Service, Library of Congress, wishing to check the accuracy of a statement made by Mr. Frank Carlucci, DDCI, in a recent speech. Mr. Carlucci had stated that under Section 662 of the Foreign Assistance Act the President was required to report intelligence activities to six committees of Congress. Mr. Wolfe thought it was eight. After checking with [redacted] OLC, I called Mr. Wolfe and told him that Mr. Carlucci's statement was accurate. I explained that Section 662 stated that the President must report to the appropriate committees of Congress meaning the Senate Foreign Relations, House International Relations, House Appropriations, Senate Appropriations, Senate Armed Services and House Armed Services Committees, but since the creation of the Senate Select Committee on Intelligence and House Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence it was no longer necessary to report to the Senate Armed Services and House Armed Services Committees, unless it was appropriate. Wolfe thanked me for this information.
