SUSPENSE _____

Remarks:

I think the way to go at this tangled problem is:

1. We ~~must~~ must revise our approach to secrecy, as it isn't working
2. We must identify those parts of our business which do not need secrecy and develop action plans for their systematic exposure
3. We must identify those matters which need secrecy for a time period (or X months after an event) + arrange a system by which they can be made available then (eg the State Dept "Foreign Relations" series) ~~DDCI/DCI~~

(4) we must identify those matters which need special compartmented protection, in as small compartments as possible so that the fact that part of an activity must be compartmented does not mean that it can't be separated from other parts which don't need it, e.g. SIGINT product in general language vs identifiable quotes -

In general, this says let's start from the posture of opening things in a sensible manner + procedure, rather than fighting a defensive battle over everything, or even some things' -
