The forthcoming elections will probably produce no radical changes and very few surprises, although there is a strong possibility that they will reveal some slight shifts in voting strength among the parties and bring the Communists back into the house, where they have not been represented since 1959. - b. "The Soviet Position on the Sino-Indian Border Conflict"
A Pravda editorial of October 25 marked a shift from Moscow's previous posture of neutrality to one of qualified support for Peiping. Peiping replied with demands for more clearcut support against Nehru. Soviet policy toward India, already seriously undermined, suffered a further blow.

- c. "UN Action Leading to Round Three in Congo?"
UN leaders express belief that the Katanga problem must be settled before the end of 1962. This could precipitate round three of fighting in Katanga. (ER 62-8358)
- d. "Implications of Peiping's Planning Commission Appointments"
Peiping announced on November 8 the appointment of seven new deputy directors of the State Planning Commission who are remarkable for (1) the high rank of most of them, and (2) their widely varied specializations. The action suggests that the regime has formed a high-level "task force" to formulate Communist China's Third Five Year Plan (1963-57) on a crash basis. (ER 62-8422)
