- On 19 and 26 October 1962 a large radar installation was observed on a small hill on Punta Stupisce, Vis (Lissa) Island (N 43.02/E 16.10).
[REDACTED] the radar, which had an internal dimension of about 10 meters and an overall height of about 20 meters, appeared to be mounted on a dark grey metal base about 15 x 5 meters in size. 50X1-HUM
- On the lower slopes of the hill on which the radar stood was a path along which there was an artillery position of five guns, which were retractable and camouflaged with foliage and other materials. The guns were set up inside caves. 50X1-HUM
- In the vicinity of the radar, directly to the north, was a white building with a dark red roof. Immediately on the left of this building were two other similar structures [REDACTED] identified as probable quarters for military personnel assigned to the post. Northeast of these buildings there were several van trailers, [REDACTED] described as "tournament barracks" types, in an open area. 50X1-HUM
