SUBJECT : MSAG Suggestion to Expand CIA Displays

On 7 November 1973, the MSAG expressed the view that CIA "in-house" displays by the Fine Arts Commission should be expanded and shown to the general public--school children, visitors, and tourists. There was reference to the drug display, Berlin tunnel, Cuban missile crisis, "Need to Know" film, etc.

I believe that [redacted] memorandum of 25 March 1974 makes a good point that this could be time consuming--and might involve considerable manpower and resources--a "luxury" we cannot afford at this time. On the less dramatic side, some effort might be made to give greater circulation to the Security film "Need to Know." Basically, at this time I would suggest that we would be well advised to go with a "low profile."
