x Brown-Coal Basin in Northern Bohemia - compensation of work - study.
x Wages - study.

An analysis of the wage conditions in 4 mines of the North Bohemian Coal Basin, especially during the years 1953 and 1954. Investigation of the efficiency of the existing schedules with the result that the proportion between the growth of labor productivity and the growth of wages is not maintained. The main reason of the unsatisfactory condition is seen in the "soft" and technically not justified efficiency norms, in the insufficient difference between the individual grades, in the imperfectly designed machinery, and in incorrect planning indicators which do not possess a mobilizing character.

The study is intended for scientific and technical workers and contains information on the possibilities of using measurements in the changes of electric conductivity in science and manufacture. The introduction deals with the theory and methods of measuring the conductivity of solutions and solids. The following chapters deal with the direct and indirect conductometry, conductometric titration, membrane conductivity, and applied conductometry. Included are numerous examples from many fields of science and practice. The authors are pointing out the rapid development of the conductometric methods applied in an ever increasing number of fields.

Rozhlasove a sdelovaci prijimace. (Radio and Communication Receivers. 1st ed. illus., index) Prague, NV, 1957. 335 p. Vol. 14 of Kniznice radiotechniky (Series on Radio Engineering).

- x Radio receivers - design.
- x Communication receivers - design.

A book, which is intended to be a link between the basic knowledge of radio engineering and the studies at a higher professional level, deals mostly with the theory without a special regard to its application. It requires certain basic knowledge in the field of radio engineering, mathematics, and physics. The subject matter is divided into six parts. Three are devoted to the design of the receivers. The introduction contains information on the present conditions of the receiver technology; it is followed by the description of the technical details in the design of the receivers and their accessories with regard to their application. Other parts are devoted to the tuning and measuring of receivers and their parts.

Prague, SWIL, 1957. 16 p.

x Electrical installations - construction - regulations.

Survey and information on the regulations concerning the construction of the current electrical installations. Because of the obsolescence of many regulations of 1950, the manual might contribute to the solution of constructional and operational problems. Regulations concerning Czechoslovak standards in preparation are printed differently to separate them from the valid regulations.

x Long-distance communication techniques - equipment.

A survey of the basic equipment for a long-distance transmission by open-air and underground cables and through the high-voltage transmission lines. The author points out mutual relationship between the individual parts of the transmission lines, offers methods of their technical solution, and describes the design of individual installations. He also deals with the properties of the equipment manufactured or planned to be manufactured by the Czechoslovak industry, and presents a survey of the present results of the Czechoslovak industry in this field.

- x Regulation - mathematics.
- x Automation - mathematics.

The book presupposes the knowledge of differentials and integrals. It explains, in the introduction, the theory of the complex variable and harmonic analysis. It derives the Laplace and Laplace-Wagner transformation from Fourier's integral. The transformation is used in the mathematical and graphic solutions of the regulation circuits. The study presents its properties, main principles for its calculation and the methods of transferring pictures to the originals. The second part of the book is devoted to the application of the transformation in solving differential and difference equations. It gives also instructions on how to work with the frequency characteristics.

x Dukla Pass - military operation, September-November 1944 - analysis.

The study is the most comprehensive and complete analysis of the memorable Dukla Pass-Presov operation with which has been published until now. The operation was planned as a quick relief to the Slovak national uprising, but instead, it was turned into a difficult conquest of a mountainous terrain due to a series of unfavorable circumstances, causing as their consequence, heavy losses on both sides. The authors offer an exhaustive description of the preparations, start, and the successive phases of the battle lasting 60 days in which the brotherly aid of the Soviet army and the battle solidarity of the Soviet and Czechoslovak units have been proved. The study also analyses the battles and draws conclusions useful for the theory of tactics. It contains maps and photographs.

This is the first, strictly technical work, on these karst caverns known in Central Europe for a long time. It furnishes a clear picture of the Demanova caverns, their history, development, microclimate, and their animal and plant life. It does not limit itself to describe only the underground formations, but deals also with those on the surface as far as they connect with the others. This work on the Demanova caverns is the result of five years of field studies, performed in the framework of research studies of the Museum of the Slovak Karst in Liptovsky Mikulas. The work contains detailed maps of the caverns, which form its second part.
