SUBJECT: SURVEY OF SCIENTIFIC AND TECHNICAL MONOGRAPHS PUBLISHED IN CHINA

SOURCE: Chinese Open Sources, 1950-1958

STAT

Since the establishment of the People's Republic of China in 1949, one of the main achievements of the Chinese Communists has been the expansion of publication activities in the scientific and technical fields. The Chinese Academy of Sciences publishing house, Science Press, alone, issued 1,106 monographic titles during the First Five-Year Plan (1953-1957).

This report contains statistics compiled from both Chinese and Hong Kong sources available in the Library of Congress. Approximately 250 catalogs of Chinese books, representing 14 private and government controlled publishing firms and bookstores, were used in this report. However, according to the 1958 edition of the People's Handbook there are 101 publishing firms in China. Each publishing firm and bookstore periodically issues catalogs of Chinese books which not only includes a list of newly published works, but also of revised editions and reprints. The catalogs of bookstores also list books currently received from more than one publishing firm. Therefore, it is obvious, that a certain amount of duplicate listing occurs, the extent of which it is not possible to determine accurately given the limited resources at hand. It is also impractical for the purposes of this report to attempt the difficult task of distinguishing between reprints, revised editions and new works. It merely shows the total number of books published by the indicated publishing firms and the total number of books received by the indicated publishing firms and the total number of books received by the indicated book stores at the time the catalogs were published. It should be further noted that the catalogs utilized in this report only represent the issues in the Library of Congress and are not complete sets. For some years the Library has only a few issues available. Therefore, there is every reason to believe that publication activity was much greater than the figures in the attached statistics indicate.

In addition, this report contains a chart of general monographic works published during 1950-1955 (page four); and a list of selected Chinese scientific and technical monographs arranged by subject.

It is suggested that this report be utilized only as a guide in studying the trends in the publication of Chinese Communists scientific and technical monographic works.

This comprehensive reference book deals principally with those crude durgs listed in Chinese pharmacopeia with special emphasis on those which are in general use.

Their source, habitat, cultivation, collection, manufacture, pharmacological properties and efficacy are described and classified according to their usage.

The author gives a brief general outline of the morphology and properties of crude drugs before describing each drug separately.

The first volume includes a general outline of pharmacognosy and general properties of crude drugs derived from roots, seeds, stems, bark, leages, flowers, fruits and nuts.

The second volume deals with the following:

- 1) Herbs. 2) Algae. 3) Substances utilized for their physical properties. 4) Crude drugs containing saccharides. 5) Dried botanical colloidal latex. 6) Liquid syrup. 7) Aliphatic oils. 8) Waxes. 9) Volatile containing antibiotic substance. 12) The collection drying and storage of crude drugs. 13) The cultivation of medicinal plants. 14) The chemical composition of crude drugs and their differentiation or assay.
