ACADEMIC ACTIVITIES

1. During the 1966-67 school year there were 303 graduate students concentrating on East Asian Studies at Columbia University. 100 of these had completed all the requirements for the doctorate except the dissertation. Of the 203 at the pre-oral level 126 were specializing in China: 25 in traditional China and 101 in 19th and 20th century China. Of the 100 preparing dissertations, 56 were writing on China: 11 on traditional and 45 on modern. In the East Asia Institute itself (a three year certificate program) there were 31 first year students, 24 second year, and 23 third year. This total of 78 is a 16 increase over total enrollment in the previous year.

Among recent activities of the Contemporary China Studies Committee at Columbia is the initiation of the Research Project on Leadership in Communist China, with Donald Klein as Director. Its first products will be two book-length studies, one on leadership in the economic field by Richard Diao and one in foreign affairs by Mr. Klein. The committee is also supporting projects by Richard Sorich to compile a documentary volume on the Chinese communes and to publish a union list of major Chinese-language sources on Chicom law; Cecil Johnson's study of Chinese Communist policy toward Latin America; O. Edmund Chubb's study of Sino-Soviet Relations; Chiang Yung-ching's study of Chinese relations with Ho Chiminh in the 1930s and 1940s; William Hwang's study of the Chinese Writers' Union; C. Martin Wilbur's study of the Chinese Revolution in the 1920s; Carl Riskin's study of the Chinese economy; Donald Zagoria's work on Chinese and Soviet policy on Vietnam; and A. Doak Barnett's study of government and politics in Communist China.

Four memoirs in Columbia Oral History Project are in various stages of completion; General Chang Fa-K'uei, General Li Tsung-jen, Dr. V.K. Wellington Koo, and Franklin Lien Ho. (Extracted from: Annual Report of the East Asian Institute, Columbia University)

2. The biographic files of the American Consulate General, Hong Kong, are being microfilmed, as we reported earlier. Copies will be deposited in the Union Research Institute, Hong Kong; Columbia University; and at Stanford University with John Lewis as custodian. The project of microfilming is now nearing completion.

3. The current membership of the Joint Committee on Contemporary China is Walter Galenson (Cornell), Fred Mote (Princeton), Bob Scalapino (U. of Cal.), George Taylor (U. of Washington), Ezra Vogel (Harvard), and Albert Feuerwerker (Michigan).

4. The support of centers for Chinese language and area studies by the Office of Education, HEW, under the National Defense Education Act of 1958 is summarized in Attachment C (unclassified).

5. Rutgers University is inaugurating a Far East Department, to be headed by Dr. Ardath Burk, formerly of the Government Department and a specialist on Japanese government.

6. Dr. Lucien Pye, MIT, will be moving to Princeton University. No further data available at present.

7. David S. Nivison, Professor of Chinese and Philosophy, Stanford, was awarded the Prix Stanislas-Julien in May 1967 for his recent book The Life and Thought of Chang Hsueh-ch'eng. The Prix Stanislas-Julien is awarded annually, since 1873, for "the best work concerning China" in the Western World.

8. In addition to the Ford Foundation grants for Chinese programs, mentioned in Newsletter #3 (Berkeley $900,000; Columbia $1,200,000; Cornell $500,000; Harvard $1,500,000; Michigan $900,000; and $500,000 to help establish a China Materials Development Center) Ford also made four grants for Chinese studies programs in Britain: University of Leeds $50,000; Contemporary China Institute, London University $325,000; School of Oriental and African Studies, London University $175,000; and London School of Economics $280,000. There was also a $250,000 grant to the National Committee on United States-China Relations to stimulate public discussion about contemporary China. This is a total of $6,580,000 for China programs.

9. The Social Sciences Research Council's Committee on Exchange with Asian Institutions has appointed Marius B. Jansen, Professor of History, Princeton, for a research assignment on Japanese influences on the Chinese and Benjamin I. Schwartz, Professor of History and Government, Harvard, for research on Chinese intellectual history. Both appointments are in Tokyo and are parts of a program to facilitate participation of American social scientists in development of research and communication with scholars at the Toyo Bunko (Oriental Library), Tokyo and The Institute of Modern History Academia Sinica, Taipei.

10. A new journal devoted "solely to the publication of translations of high literary value" will make its debut in the spring of 1968. Titled K'uei Hsing, A Repository of Asian Literature in Translation, each issue will consist of about 200 pp. of translations from literature, history, and folklore of East Asia. It will be edited by Liu Wu-chi, Professor and Chairman of the East Asian Languages and Literature Department at Indiana University and Friedrich Bischoff.

11. The Secretariat has on file in Dutch the program and speech summaries of the "China Week," held in Amsterdam 9-14 October. Official participants were Owen Lattimore, K. S. Karol, Stuart Schram, Han Suyin, Edgar Snow, Professor W. F. Wertheim, E. P. J. Cammelbeeck, W. L. Brugsma, Drs. Fenna v.d. Burg, Dr. P. G. J. Korteiveg, O. Heldring, Theo Stibbe, Dr. P. Baehr and Dr. L. v.d. Land.

12. News from the Center for Chinese Studies, University of California, Berkeley:

a. Noriyuki Tokuda, of the Asian Economic Research Institute (Ajia Keizai Kenkyu-jo) has joined the Center for at least one year. He will be completing a study on Yanan Communism.

b. Also joining the center are two Australians, Neal and Deirdre Hunter, who left China in April 1967 after having taught English for 21 months at the Shanghai Foreign Language Institute. They will write a book on Communist China.

c. The Center is planning four monographs this year, three of which have been decided upon:

NDEA Language and Area Centers

The National Defense Education Act (NDEA) of 1958 provided for federal assistance, through the Office of Education of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, to academic language and area centers. The aim was to encourage colleges and universities to introduce instruction in hitherto neglected and uncommonly taught languages deemed to be of critical importance to the US.

Under terms of the act, the federal government would provide up to 50% of the cost of establishing and operating approved area centers during a seven-year period 1958-1965. The program was subsequently extended through June 1968. By the end of the 1967-1968 school year, a total of over $25 million in federal aid will have been granted to 106 NDEA centers established at 63 colleges and universities.

The language and area centers concentrate on the non-Western parts of the world. The curriculum of a center is not limited to language instruction; each center seeks to offer a cohesive area program, combining several pertinent academic disciplines, with attention focused on a single world region.
