- TJUNG Kun Tjung, proprietor of the restaurant Populair, is a delegate of the Kung Chan Tang (Chinese Communist Party) in Java. He was sent to Indonesia in December 1941 by order of MAO Tse-tung and CHOU En-lai.
- INJO Beng Liong, a brother of INJO Beng Goat, and formerly a physician in Purwokerto, is also associated with MAO Tse-tung. Dr. KWA Tjian Siao, a Chinese Communist who died in 1948, ordered INJO Beng Liong to China in 1946 to receive post-war instructions. The Sin Ming Hui emerged as a result of this action.
- Olga Tsechenkina, of the Cominform (sic), who came to Indonesia in 1946, and who lectured to the cadres of the Sin Ming Hui and members of the Yen An Tsing Nien Tuan, gave further orders to Dr. KWA.
- In late 1947, TJUNG Kun Tjung received more recent orders from Georgi Afrin, TASS representative who was then in Batavia. These orders included the following:
 - (a) The Chinese Communist movement must be disguised during the transition period.
 - (b) Indonesian Communist uprisings must be supported at every opportunity.
 - (c) Anti-CHIANG Kai-shek and anti-American propaganda must be circulated.
 - (d) The Chinese community in Indonesia must be demoralized during the severest part of the Soviet Russian "cold war".
 - (e) The necessity for co-operation with Indonesians, Dutch progressives, and others, who oppose Dutch, British, American and Chinese exploitation.
 - (f) The necessity for the maintenance of close but careful co-operation with the Min Chu Tung Men, and other pro-Communist and pro-Russian organizations.

5. In early February 1949, the Ta Tsung Seng Hwo Sze (Ta Tsung Sze) of Surabaya bribed the Dutch birth registrar there to issue false birth certificates to Chinese Communists who infiltrate from Malaya to Surabaya. The registrar was arrested and jailed. The Chinese Communist leaders, who number over one hundred, are still free.
6. These leaders are creating cells in Surabaya, Malang, and Banjuwangi. Most of the leaders use false names, and the cells are disguised as "Kuo U Courses" (Chinese Study Centers), etc.
