1. There are two law schools in Rumania, one in Bucharest and the other in Cluj. Common workers who are Communist Party members are selected to attend the school for a one year course. Upon "graduation," these persons are appointed judges.
2. Each tribunal has its Birou de Cadre (Cadre Office), the chief of which is always a Communist. The chief's main function is to keep in close touch with the Party and transmit instructions to the judge presiding over each case as to the attitude which should be adopted in a given controversy or trial.
3. Public prosecutors handle cases of little or no importance. Any cases which might have some political significance are dealt with by the Securitate.
