As of 26 November 1951, the East China Military Area Command had instructed all coastal defense units, air defense units and public security units in coastal areas to take strict precautionary measures, after receiving information that intelligence agents of Chinese nationality, trained by the "Taiwan Chinese-American Unit of UN Headquarters in Japan" (sic), would attempt to infiltrate into important coastal areas of East China by air and by sea with the intentions of destroying military equipment and reconnoitering military activities. The main points of this instruction were as follows:

- a. With the help of Nationalist remnants, the American imperialists have trained large numbers of intelligence agents who will secretly infiltrate into our territory by sea and by air in order to steal military secrets from us and to destroy reconstruction enterprises of our People's New China.
- b. To meet this serious situation, the East China Military Area issues this special instruction for coastal defense units, air defense units and public security units to struggle to protect the fruits of victory from our People's Revolution, to consolidate the national defense and to establish a strict guard against infiltration of anti-revolutionary intelligence agents into Communist China.
- c. The administrative village (村) and town (镇) will be the unit responsible for establishing a unified coastal defense; joint defense meetings must be held at fixed intervals to study the problems and to take necessary action in strengthening coastal defenses.
- d. People's information networks must be established and reconnaissance activities in coastal areas must be intensified.
- e. Security defense committees must be formed by the coastal fishermen and salt workers.
- f. Coastal patrol teams and hill region inspection teams must be established in various coastal areas; these teams will be placed under unified control in order to assist military units in their coastal defense duties.
