5. [Redacted] Talked further with Pat Holt, of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee staff, concerning the briefing of the Morse Subcommittee on Monday, 13 June at 3:30 P.M. I raised the question of a security sweep with Mr. Holt who said there was no objection from the Committee standpoint. I indicated that since there was no objection and since this was usual practice for us, we would go ahead with a sweep. In further conversation on the substance of the briefing, Mr. Holt said that while the Subcommittee members would probably ask questions [Redacted]

7. [Redacted] Talked with Mr. Stark, Deputy Director of the Joint Economic Committee. We reviewed the exchange of correspondence between the Committee and the Agency relative to our cooperation in the Committee's preparation of a study on Communist China. Stark mentioned that lack of attribution to the authors of the Agency items gave them some problems since all other contributions were identified, however, he indicated that they could live with this arrangement if necessary. He pointed out, however, that he was quite certain this new study would attract considerable attention. Stark took this opportunity to mention that the Agency might want to "take a second look" at the Rush Greenslade piece prepared for the Committee's Soviet study since, as Stark put it, the item was rather "colorful." Stark was obviously thinking about the George Carver situation in making this suggestion.
