STAT

Dear Admiral Inman:

On behalf of my colleagues on the Export Administration Subcommittee of The President's Export Council, I would like to express our appreciation for your attendance at our May 26 luncheon. Your review of the problems inherent in technology transfer between the Western nations and the Eastern Bloc has created additional impetus for the Subcommittee's work on the many complicated facets of the entire export control issue. In our view, the inefficiencies and contradictions that are part of any large bureaucratic system often obscure true priorities in the course of daily work. Streamlining the export license process can assist in diverting important resources and expertise to monitoring and controlling those technologies and commodities that are truly critical to the United States national security.

I would like to express my personal recognition of your 30 years of government service, and I am certain that your new career will be as outstanding as your previous one.

Sincerely,
