Mr. Dulles stressed the importance of the mission of this committee and stated that he was appointing Mr. Robert Amory, Jr., to serve as its chairman. Various other members furnished the names of their representatives on the committee. It was also agreed that [redacted] should be an observer on the CCPC, particularly in the light of his present assignment to survey potential sources of warning information. The members then concurred in the Chairman's suggestion that the committee's first order of business should be the selection of a technical secretary. In this connection, the Chairman stated that he wished to discuss the matter of the first substantive assignment of the committee further in a restricted session.
