SOVIET MEDICAL ACTIVITY IN JALALABAD

25X1

Activity within the Soviet medical compound at Jalalabad increased significantly during September and October. During September the Soviets erected 11 large general purpose tents in the medical compound, only three to five tents usually appear. By mid-October, the numbers of tents had increased to 21 large general purpose and 11 squad-size tents, a total capacity of approximately 500 beds. The Soviets placed screens around two of the smaller tent groupings by the end of October.

25X1

25X1

25X1

Comment: The increase in medical activity most likely is caused by disease, a chronic problem among Soviet troops in Afghanistan.

25X1

The Soviets use screens to quarantine areas. Alternatively, elements of the 56th Air Assault Brigade--garrisoned at Jalalabad--took part in multiple heliborne assaults to clear the Salang Pass between Kabul and Pol-e Khomri in October and may have sustained heavy casualties.

25X1

IN BRIEF

-- A Soviet soldier seeking refuge bolted into the US Embassy in Kabul last Thursday, but departed Monday with the Soviet ambassador. Soviet and Afghan military units surrounded the US compound and harassed Embassy personnel entering and leaving; electric power to the Embassy was cut off for at least two days. The situation has returned to normal. In 1980, US Embassy personnel were holed up in the Embassy for almost one week when regime forces blockaded the Embassy after a Soviet soldier attempted to defect; he also ultimately decided to leave with Soviet officials.

25X1

-- The new Indian Ambassador to Afghanistan, Inder Pal Khosla, is discernibly pro-regime, according to the US Embassy in Kabul, and studiously avoids Western diplomats. US officials are concerned that Khosla's behavior is contrary to official Indian policy and could give Soviet and regime officials the impression that India is more sympathetic toward Afghanistan than it, in fact, is.

PERSPECTIVE

25X1

THE WAR IN OCTOBER

25X1

Fighting in Afghanistan remained intense during October. There were several Soviet operations--sometimes with Afghan regime forces--in early October to clear strategic lines of communication and destroy insurgent bands and their bases.

25X1

25X1

For its part, the resistance continued to pressure Soviet and Afghan forces in Qandahar, Herat, and Paghman, rocketed Kabul, and inflicted more aircraft losses.

25X1

Soviet units also conducted extensive air and sweep operations in an attempt to clear the Paghman area northwest of Kabul of insurgent strongholds.

25X1

25X1

US Embassy sources report that the Soviets are constructing outposts and garrisons there in an effort to secure the area, long a security headache for Soviet troops.

25X1

25X1

Insurgents Maintain Pressure in Other Areas

Despite heavy Soviet and Afghan activity, insurgents maintained pressure in several other areas throughout the month.

25X1

US Embassy sources indicate that heavy fighting occurred day and night throughout the month in Qandahar City, and the insurgents are gradually expanding their control. After repeated resistance attacks, the Afghan regime pulled its guard posts from the main bazaar in Qandahar and conceded the area to the insurgents. US Embassy sources report that a hundred regime troops mutinied, killed their superiors, and defected to the insurgents. Soviet troops remain holed up at the airport or in their garrisons, and 1,000 fresh Soviet troops were sent to relieve those who had been there for six months, according to US Embassy sources.

25X1

25X1

25X1

25X1

US

25X1

Embassy sources indicate that the resistance conducted a sustained rocket and heavy machinegun attack on Kabul airport on 19 October and rocketed Kabul nearly every day for a week.

25X1

25X1

Outlook

Soviet and regime operations in the Salang Pass probably will disrupt insurgent activities only temporarily. The Soviets did not garrison additional troops to secure this area, and Masood was reportedly resupplying his units. We expect increased airstrikes and increased Soviet and regime ground operations-- perhaps with redeployment of aircraft and personnel from other parts of Afghanistan--to temporarily drive insurgents from Herat and Qandahar. Because of the difficulty of transporting supplies to Herat, guerrilla groups there may face difficulty this winter countering and sustaining operations.
