Per our phone call of 28 June 1984, this letter responds to the Office of Management and Budget's (OMB) request for the Central Intelligence Agency's (CIA) views on the Department of Justice's (DOJ) comments on the Office of Personnel Management's (OPM) revised bill to deny retirement benefits to employees convicted of certain felonies. As I stated in our earlier phone call of 15 June 1984, CIA objects to DOJ's view that the Central Intelligence Agency Retirement and Disability Service (CIARDS) should be included within the retirement systems covered by this bill.

In lieu of a letter stating our opposition, CIA representatives met with DOJ representatives on 27 June 1984 to discuss a possible resolution to the differing views on CIARDS coverage as well as other problems related to classified information. Despite a broad discussion of the problems inherent in the DOJ proposal, the parties were unable to resolve this problem.
