Dear Dean Randle:

Thank you for your letter of April 13 and the kind thoughts.

All of us here at CIA's National Foreign Assessment Center who participated in the meetings with you and the International Fellows found them stimulating.

I am certain that arrangements can be made for similar meetings in the future.

Dear Mark:

Thank you for your two letters in April and for returning the Agency badge.

All of us here who participated in the meetings with you and your colleagues found them stimulating. The emphasis on a question and answer format certainly was appropriate for a group as bright and well informed as yours.

I am certain that arrangements can be made for similar meetings in the future.

Dear Brian,

I just wanted to thank you for the marvelous job you did arranging our April 6th briefing at CIA. I thought the session went very well indeed, and the Fellows seemed to find it interesting and valuable. I'm sure future classes of Fellows will want briefings at CIA as well, and hope they'll be fortunate enough to have your help once again.

It was a pleasure meeting you. Thanks again.

Enclosed is a complete list of the Columbia students who will be attending the Central Intelligence Agency briefing on Thursday afternoon, April 6. Should you desire any additional information, please do not hesitate to call either myself or Mr. Mark Jaskowiak.

The Fellows could not reach a consensus as to the subject matter of the briefing session, so please inform the quest speakers that they may address the topics of their choice. I have also enclosed several brochures so that the speakers may familiarize themselves with our program in advance of the briefing session. Once you have lined up all the speakers that we shall see, we would appreciate having brief biographies of each. Also, we would like to know, as soon as possible, whether or not Admiral Turner will be free to speak with us.

We greatly look forward to our discussions with members of the CIA and we extend our thanks to you for arranging this opportunity.

Dear [REDACTED] STATINTL

Twice each year, the International Fellows go to Washington to meet with policy-makers active in the field of foreign affairs. Last fall, the Fellows met with high officials from the State Department, the World Bank and the Pentagon. Traditionally, these meetings take the form of an off-the-record briefing, with short presentations and question and answer periods. The Fellows will be in Washington again on April 6 and 7, and many members have shown an interest in spending a morning or afternoon meeting with officials of the CIA.

The International Fellows are fifty of Columbia's most outstanding graduate students, selected for their achievements and leadership potential. They represent such academic and professional fields as political science, history, business, law, and journalism, and participate in a unique interdisciplinary course in international politics and U.S. foreign policy. Enclosed is a current bulletin describing in further detail the Fellows and their activities. Please feel free to write or call if you have any further inquiries to make.

It is our hope that some members of the CIA would find a discussion with the Fellows stimulating and enjoyable. The Fellows would certainly consider it a valuable and rewarding experience.

The alumni/1960-77

A Profile

The success of a program such as this one can only be measured in the achievements of the alumni; in the 18 years of the IJP its alumni have distinguished themselves in ways that reflect upon the uniquely interdisciplinary character of the program itself.

When the seventeenth class of Fellows completed their year with the Program in May 1976, the alumni total reached 800. Of these, about 150 are continuing graduate study, mostly completing Ph.D. and J.D. degrees. The remainder are pursuing diverse careers, both in the United States and all over the world.

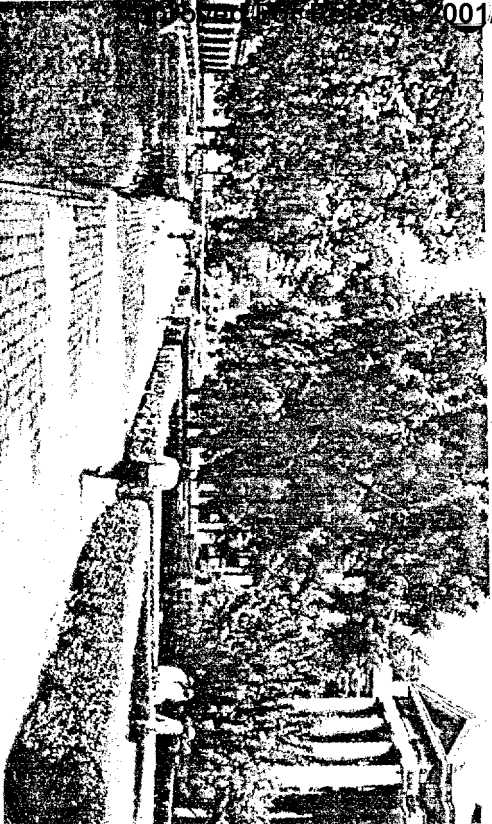

The largest group, thirty percent, have gone into teaching. One alumni, for instance, is currently an instructor of international relations at the University of Wisconsin. Other institutions where alumni are now teaching include Amherst, Barnard, Bennington, Columbia, Harvard, Johns Hopkins, Stanford, U.C.L.A., Wesleyan, and Yale.

The next largest group, twenty percent, are practicing law, with several specializing in international and transnational law. The majority have entered private practice with firms in Washington and New York, but some have established their own firms. Several alumni in this group have served in the foreign office of Shearman and Sterling, while another is in the London office of Coudert Brothers.

Ten percent of the alumni are journalists, most of them working on international news or as foreign correspondents. One alumnus, for instance, was recently appointed to the Moscow bureau of the "New York Times." Other alumni are working with "Fortune," "Time," "Newsweek," "The Washington Post," "Congressional Quarterly," "The Associated Press, United Press International and the American Broadcasting Corporation, among other organizations.

Another ten percent have entered business, and many are stationed abroad with the overseas branches of their companies. Six percent are doctors and several of them have been associated with public health projects both here and abroad. Five percent are in government service; recruited to the Departments of State, Defense, Justice and Commerce. Alumni are also working for the United States Information Agency, the Agency for International Development, the Central Intelligence Agency, the National Security Council, the Federal Reserve, the Office of Economic Opportunity, the National Institute of Health and Securities and Exchange Commission. One alumnus is a member of the Planning & Coordination staff of the State Department.

About ten percent of the alumni are working for international organizations, for the United Nations, the International Monetary Fund, OECD, and the Inter-American Development Bank. Another ten percent are working for private research institutes and non-profit foundations including Ford, RAND, Hudson and Brookings. One alumnus, for instance is a Research Fellow at the Council for Foreign Relations.

MEMORANDUM FOR: THE RECORD

I called Malcolm Stewart in New York to arrange a date and time for the Columbia International Fellows visit. He said it was not possible as arrangements had been made to spend the time with ACDA. He wanted to know if such a visit was feasible. I assured him it was and urged him to give us notice in good time next year. He agreed to do so.

Twice each year, the International Fellows go to Washington to meet with policy-makers active in the field of foreign affairs. Last fall, the Fellows met with high officials from the State Department, the World Bank and the Pentagon. Traditionally, these meetings take the form of an off-the-record briefing, with short presentations and question and answer periods. The Fellows will be in Washington again on April 6 and 7, and many members have shown an interest in spending a morning or afternoon meeting with officials of the CIA.

The International Fellows are fifty of Columbia's most outstanding graduate students, selected for their achievements and leadership potential. They represent such academic and professional fields as political science, history, business, law, and journalism, and participate in a unique interdisciplinary course in international politics and U.S. foreign policy. Enclosed is a current bulletin describing in further detail the Fellows and their activities. Please feel free to write or call if you have any further inquiries to make.

It is our hope that some members of the CIA would find a discussion with the Fellows stimulating and enjoyable. The Fellows would certainly consider it a valuable and rewarding experience.

Cordially

Malcolm J. Stewart
