Mr. Reed D. Auerbach

[Redacted]
New York, New York 10027

Dear Mr. Auerbach:

I would like to extend an apology first for the delay in responding to your request to me during the briefing here on 23 October for the Columbia University International Fellows. It took some time for me to obtain the information you inquired about.

I have enclosed two information sheets on the Graduate Studies Program, which should answer most of your questions about the program.

Sincerely,
STATINTL

Purpose

The International Fellows Program was conceived in the belief that the responsibilities of the United States in world affairs require new approaches to the education of its future leaders. The Program was established in 1960 to do a specific job: to produce leaders in many different fields—law, business, journalism, social science, government, and others—with the desire, the ability, and the training to act effectively in the international arena.

The International Fellows are selected from among the most promising students in the professional and graduate schools of the University. Of the 1,000 or so Fellows appointed since 1960, more than half graduated from college with honors or as members of Phi Beta Kappa, and over a quarter held major, nationally-awarded, graduate fellowships.

While mastering their chosen disciplines, the Fellows receive through the Program rigorous exposure to international politics and to United States foreign policy. Outstanding scholars and officials come to the University to speak, and intensive briefing trips to the White House, the Congress, the United Nations, and various national and international agencies are arranged. The organizing principles of the Program have remained constant over the years, but the content of the instruction has been continuously revised and updated. A course of lectures and briefings is offered that reflects the latest understanding of international relations.

One of the objectives of the Program, and of the foundations and corporations that support it, is to inspire a commitment to public service among the Fellows. It is with pleasure and pride that we see the graduates of the Program assuming important positions in our society. Many are already serving in international aspects of their chosen professions—in government, business, journalism, economic consulting, law, medicine, teaching, and others. If some of the Fellows achieve positions of leadership, and if they all continue their interest in international affairs, this Program will have fulfilled its purpose.

The Foundations

The International Fellows Program was initiated at Columbia University in 1960 under the terms of a generous grant from the Edward John Noble Foundation. A number of other foundations have endorsed the Program's objectives by providing financial support. A complete list of these supporting organizations follows:

The George F. Baker Trust	Ellis L. Phillips Foundation
The Bing Fund	The Prospect Hill Foundation
The Compton Foundation, Inc.	Charles S. Raizen Foundation
Continental Oil Company	The Reader's Digest
Crown Zellerbach Foundation	The Richardson Foundation
Houston Endowment, Inc.	The Singer Company Foundation
Inland Steel-Ryerson Foundation	Alfred P. Sloan Foundation
IBM	Sonhil Fund
The International Nickel Company	The Starr Foundation
The Johnson Foundation	Time/Life International
Merck Sharp & Dohme International	William C. Whitney Foundation
Henry and Lucy Moss Fund	The Wyomissing Foundation
The Edward John Noble Foundation

Facilities

For its unique course of study, the Program draws upon the facilities of one of the world's leading universities and upon the unparalleled resources that New York City offers to the student of international affairs.

Since its inception the Program has derived substantial benefit from its close association with the School of International Affairs. In 1964 the Program was officially integrated with the School, thereby permitting the Fellows to draw further upon its faculty and its other resources. In setting policy for the Program, Dean Randle has the assistance of a committee drawn from the Faculty of International Affairs, including Professors William T. R. Fox and Louis Henkin and Dean Harvey Picker.

The International Fellows Program is housed in the fifteen-story International Affairs Building. This building is the major center of international studies and activities at Columbia University. In addition to the School of International Affairs and the International Fellows Program, the building houses the Departments of Political Science, Economics, and Geography; the eight Regional Institutes; the Institute of War and Peace Studies; the Research Institute on International Change; and a 600,000-volume library devoted to all aspects of international affairs. An auditorium with a capacity of 500 and the Kellogg Conference Center on the top floor have enabled the School to expand its conference activity and increase the number of distinguished visitors.

The Program enjoys the use of these facilities and also occupies the International Fellows Seminar Room on the fourteenth floor. The Fellows meet here for their weekly discussions and assemble informally before lectures to greet guests over coffee. This room also houses a small but focused collection of international materials, including current periodicals, that have proved to be a useful supplement to the University libraries themselves.

The International Fellows have visited the Ford Foundation offices in New York City many times. McGeorge Bundy, when he was president of the Foundation, often chaired the briefings.

Admission

Qualifications for Admission

The aim of the Program is to educate future leaders of the United States effectively. It is therefore open to anyone who has been admitted to a graduate degree program in Columbia University and who plans to pursue a career in international aspects of government service, teaching, business, or the professions.

Fellows are selected by a committee appointed by the Director of the Program. Admission is based on consideration of the applicant's entire collegiate and graduate school record; on evidence of character, motivation, and professional promise; on the recommendations of instructors; and particularly on evidence of demonstrated ability and potential for leadership in a chosen field and in international affairs.

Note: Students in the School of Law and the College of Physicians and Surgeons may not enter the Program before their second year of graduate study.

Admission Procedure

An applicant for admission should write to the International Fellows Program, Room 1420, International Affairs Building, Columbia University, New York, N.Y. 10027, for an application form and for further instructions. If not already enrolled or admitted to a graduate degree program at Columbia, the applicant should also write to the admissions office of the appropriate University division (e.g., the School of Law, the Graduate School of Arts & Sciences, the Graduate School of Business, etc.) for a bulletin and application forms.

Application may be made before mid-April for participation in the Program beginning the following September.

Curriculum

Each International Fellow follows a program of study prescribed by the graduate school or department of the University in which he or she is enrolled. Fellows are strongly encouraged to take the elective courses that will be the best preparation for service in the international aspects of their professions. As part of their individual programs, the Fellows take a one-year lecture-seminar course, described below, which forms the core of the International Fellows Program. The number of credits received for the course is determined by the Committee on Instructor of the school or department concerned.

Lecture and Seminar Course

IFP W6045x-W6046y—The United States in World Affairs—is a lecture and seminar course given for the International Fellows exclusively. In the twenty or so years in which the course has been offered, its academic directors have sought to provide the Fellows with the best instruction in world affairs and U.S. foreign policy. The Fellows have had the opportunity to discuss the issues among themselves, and with leading scholars, publicists, and public figures. Each year, guest lecturers are chosen to present their expertise on a variety of topics in international politics and American foreign relations.

The subject matter of the course has evolved to reflect the growing complexity of the modern world, and our growing awareness of that complexity. An early concentration upon security issues in the last years of the Cold War has been increasingly augmented with surveys of regional problems and with investigations of the global problems of human welfare. Recently the Fellows looked at aspects of world energy affairs, and sessions have been scheduled on oil, food, and the problems of less-developed countries, as well as the philosophical problems of justice and human rights in world politics.

In addition to the lectures, the Fellows select one of three seminar groups to satisfy the course requirement. In the autumn term, one group focuses on the theories and concepts of international politics; the second and third deal with American foreign policy issues. The focus of the seminar groups in the spring term is decided in accordance with the interests of the Fellows and the Director.

The Director of the Program has also been a member of the Columbia faculty. Since 1972 the course has been directed by Robert F. Randle, Lecturer in International Affairs at Columbia University. He is the author of "Geneva 1954: The Settlement of the Indochinese War," and "The Origins of Peace: A Study of Peacemaking and the Structure of Peace Settlements." He was the principal editor of "From War to Peace: Essays in Peacemaking and War Termination," the fourth book published by the International Fellows Program. Mr. Randle is assisted by members of the Columbia faculty, visiting professors from other universities, and guest lecturers with long experience in the formulation and conduct of domestic and foreign policy. The course is complemented by special briefing trips and activities during the year.

The Fellows meet in a lecture session each Tuesday afternoon from 4 to 6 p.m. and in one seminar session each week during both terms. Washington briefings are on a Thursday and a Friday each term (usually in late October and again in early April). Other briefings are ordinarily scheduled on Friday afternoons.

The lecture series for the current academic year appears in the enclosed insert.

Briefing Trips and Special

Activities

Orientation

The International Fellows Program begins with a short orientation session held immediately after classes start at Columbia in the fall.

The United Nations

A major feature of the Program has always been a unique series of briefings at the United Nations and the U.S. Mission to the U.N. The experience provides the Fellows with as many geographical and ideological perspectives on the work of the organization and on U.S. foreign policy, as can be scheduled in one day.

Washington, D.C.

Over the years, the Fellows have made two-day briefing trips to Washington, one in the fall and one in the spring.

The fall visit has usually focused upon the Executive Branch. The Fellows have met with several top officials at the Department of Defense, including the Service Secretaries. At the State Department, the Fellows have been briefed by the Assistant Secretaries of State and on occasion, the incumbent Secretary of State. At the White House, the Fellows have met with Assistants to the President for economic matters, manpower, and special projects, and senior staff members in the office of the Assistant to the President for National Security Affairs.

The spring trip concentrates upon the role of Congress in the formulation of foreign policy, and the Fellows then meet several prominent members of the Senate and House, including senior members of the Foreign Relations and Foreign Affairs Committees.

The main Washington objectives are Capitol Hill, the White House, the Pentagon, the State Department, and the Treasury, but the Program also visits other relevant institutions in the D.C. area, including the World Bank, the Central Intelligence Agency, the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, the International Monetary Fund, and the Washington Bureau of the "New York Times." The Fellows have also met with officials from the Organization of American States and ministers at various embassies.

Other Trips and Activities

Because of the New York location of the Program, the International Fellows have been able to visit corporations and organizations active in the field of international affairs. Each year, for example, the Fellows visit the Rockefeller Foundation to discuss its role in international development.

The John Allen Love Memorial Award

John Love was an International Fellow in the class of 1965-66. He had received his Bachelor of Arts degree with high honors in political science from Michigan State University in 1965. He was a Ph.D. candidate in the Department of Public Law and Government at Columbia when he met an untimely death. It was to honor his memory that the Fellows in the Class of 1965-66 established an annual award for demonstrated excellence in creative scholarship.

The first award was made to John C. Farrell, IFP '66-'67; succeeding recipients have been John R. Romagna, Nicholas A. Robinson, Lynn E. Davis, Richard L. Storz, Calvin M. Mew, Naomi Williams, Norman Graham, Laurell Kendall, Joanne Adlerstein, Gordon Bertolin, Barry Davidoff, Gordon Epstein, Mary Sue Ginsberg, and Thomas Milo Somers. Awards for each year are made early in the autumn term.

The Alumni

A Profile

The success of a program such as this can be measured in part by the achievements of the alumni. In the more than twenty years that the IFP has been in existence, its alumni have distinguished themselves in ways that reflect upon the uniquely interdisciplinary character of the Program itself.

When the twentieth class of Fellows completed their year with the Program in May 1979, the alumni total reached about 1,000. Of these, about 150 continued graduate study, mostly completing Ph.D. and J.D. degrees. The remainder have pursued diverse careers, both in the United States and all over the world.

The largest group, 30 percent, have gone into teaching. One alumnus, for instance, is currently an instructor of international relations at the University of Wisconsin. Other institutions where alumni are now teaching include Amherst, Barnard, Bennington, Columbia, Harvard, Johns Hopkins, Stanford, U.C.L.A., Wesleyan, and Yale.

The next largest group, 20 percent, are practicing law, with several specializing in international and transnational law. The majority have entered private practice with firms in Washington and New York, but some have established their own firms. Several alumni in this group have served in the foreign office of Shearman and Sterling, while another is in the London office of Coudert Brothers.

Ten percent of the alumni are journalists, most of them working on international news or as foreign correspondents. One alumnus, for instance, was recently appointed to the Moscow bureau of the "New York Times." Other alumni are working with "Fortune," "Time," "Newsweek," the "Washington Post," "Congressional Quarterly," The Associated Press, United Press International, and the American Broadcasting Corporation, among other organizations.

Another 10 percent have entered business, and many are stationed abroad with the overseas branches of their companies. Five percent are doctors, and several of them have been associated with public health projects both here and abroad. Five percent are in government service, recruited to the Departments of State, Defense, Justice, and Commerce. Alumni are also working for the United States Information Agency, Agency for International Development, Central Intelligence Agency, National Security Council, Federal Reserve, Office of Economic Opportunity, National Institute of Health, and Securities and Exchange Commission. One alumnus is a member of the Planning & Coordination staff of the State Department.

About 10 percent of the alumni are working for international organizations, the United Nations, International Monetary Fund, OECD, and Inter-American

Approved For Release 2004/10/28 : CIA-RDP86B00985R000400120006-0

Development Bank. Another 10 percent are working for private research institutes and nonprofit foundations, including Ford, RAND, Hudson, and Brookings. One alumnus, for instance, is a Research Fellow at the Council on Foreign Relations.

Fifteen Fellows are ordained ministers serving here and overseas. Three alumni are in the Armed Forces, five are in the Peace Corps, and six are full-time writers. Others are following their chosen professions in architecture, social work, engineering, and industry. The alumni have lived and worked in at least seventy countries since leaving the Program and it has not always been easy to maintain contact with such a large group of people that is so professionally and geographically dispersed. Nevertheless, an Alumni Register was compiled several years ago. Alumni news is published, on the average, once a year in the School of International Affairs alumni newsletter.

Dear Mr. Klenk,

STATINTL

STATINTLS
TAT!

Your letter of September 10, 1980, addressed to [redacted] was passed to me as [redacted] has moved on to another job and I have inherited his.

We would be happy to comply with your request for a meeting with officials of the Central Intelligence Agency on October 23. We would propose that your group arrive at our Headquarters building about 1:45 p.m. for a two-hour briefing from 2-4 p.m. We hope to have Mr. Clarke, the Director of the National Foreign Assessment Center, again address the group and then answer questions during the first hour. This would be followed by a presentation on China by a panel composed of political and economic experts on that nation. I believe you and the International Fellows will again find the session here at the Central Intelligence Agency both stimulating and informative.

As you may recall from past visits, only US citizens are admitted to Headquarters building and our security people will need, as soon as possible, the Social Security numbers for all who are participating in the visit. If you will forward those names and numbers to me, I shall pass them to the proper authorities so that there will be no confusion on the day of the visit.

If you have suggestions or questions, please call me on

[redacted]

I look forward to meeting you and the International Fellows on October 23.

Sincerely,

STATINTL

Dear Mr. [Redacted]

The International Fellows of Columbia University will be making their annual fall semester trip to Washington to meet with policy-makers active in the field of foreign affairs. As you may recall, the Fellows met with Central Intelligence Agency officials last spring. The briefing and panel discussion was considered to be the highlight of the trip by many of the Fellows in attendance. This fall the Fellows will be in Washington again on October 23 and 24 and are interested in meeting with CIA officials, preferably during the afternoon of October 23.

The International Fellows are fifty of Columbia's most promising graduate students, selected for their achievements and leadership potential. They represent a broad spectrum of academic and professional fields including political science, law, history, business, journalism, and the arts, and participate in a unique interdisciplinary course in international politics and U.S. foreign policy. Enclosed is a current bulletin describing in further detail the Fellows and their activities. Please write or call if you have any additional inquiries to make.

We hope that the success of the spring 1980 meeting between the Fellows and CIA officials can be duplicated. This year's Fellows would certainly consider it a valuable and highly rewarding experience.

Cordially,

Jeffrey S. Klenk
Assistant to the Director
